GRANT'S PRINCIPLES.

What He Said While a Soldier and Has Upheld as President.

His Disinterestedness, Patriotism and Singleness of Purpose.

His Fidelity to the People and Support of Practical Reforms.

National Integrity, Equal Protection, Indestructible Union.

A Record to Contrast with Greeley's.

IN WAR.

"No terms except unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately on your works."—To Gen. Buckner, at Fort Donelson, Feb. 16, 1862.

"The effusion of blood you propose stopping by this course can be ended at any time you may choose by an unconditional surrender of the city and garrison."—To Gen. Pemberton, at Vicksburg, July 3, 1863.

"We have now ended the sixth day of very heavy fighting. The result to this time is much in our favor. Our losses have been heavy as well as those of the enemy. I think the loss of the enemy must be greater. We have taken over 5,000 prisoners in battle, whilst he has taken from us but few, except stragglers. I propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all Summer."—To Secretary Stanton, from before Spottsylvania, May 11, 1864.

"I care nothing for promotion, so long as our arms are successful."—Grant to Sherman, February, 1863.

"If my course is not satisfactory, remove me at once. I do not wish in any way to impede the success of our arms."—Grant to Halleck, Feb. 6, 1863.

"No theory of my own will ever stand in the way of my executing in good faith any order I may receive from those in authority over me."—Grant to Secretary Chase, May 29, 1863.

IN PEACE.

"This is a Republic, where the will of the people is the law of the land."—Grant's Letter to President Johnson, August, 1867.

"I shall have no policy of my own to interfere against the will of the people."—Grant's Letter, May 29, 1868.

"Human liberty is the only true foundation of human government."—Grant's Letter to the citizens of Memphis.

"Let us have peace."—Grant's Letter, May 29, 1868.

His Policy.

On all leading questions agitating the public mind I will always express my views to Congress and urge them according to my judgment, and when I think it advisable will exercise the constitutional privilege of interposing a veto to defeat measures which I oppose. But all laws will be faithfully executed, whether they meet my approval or not. I shall on all subjects have a policy to recommend, but none to enforce against the will of the people.

Enforcing the Law.

In addressing my third annual message to the law-making branch of the Government, it is gratifying to be able to state that during the past year success has generally attended the effort to execute all laws found upon the statute books. The policy has been, not to inquire into the wisdom of laws already enacted, but to learn their spirit and intent, and to enforce them accordingly. I submit these suggestions with a confidence that your combined action will be wise, statesmanlike, and in the best interests of the whole country.

Civil Service Reform.

Always favoring practical reforms, I respectfully call your attention to one abuse of long standing, which I would like to see remedied by this Congress. It is a reform in the civil service of the country. I would have it go beyond the mere fixing of the tenure of office of clerks and employes, who do not require "the advice and consent of the Senate" to make their appointments complete. I would have it govern, not the tenure, but the manner of making all appointments. There is no duty which so much embarrasses the Executive and Heads of Departments as that of appointments; nor is there any such arduous and thankless labor imposed on Senators and Representatives as that of finding places for constituents. The present system does not secure the best men, and often not fit men, for public place. The elevation and purification of the civil service of the Government will be hailed with approval by the whole people of the United States.

Do What is Right.

There has been no hesitation in changing officials in order to secure an efficient executing of the laws, sometimes, too, when, in a mere party view, undesirable political results were likely to follow; nor any hesitation in sustaining efficient officials against remonstrances wholly political.

Civil Service Reform Again.

It has been the aim of the Administration to enforce honesty and efficiency in all public offices. Every public servant who has violated the trust placed in him has been proceeded against with all the rigor of the law. If bad men have secured places it has been the fault of the system established by law and custom for making appointments, or the fault of those who recommend for Government positions persons not sufficiently well known to them personally, or who give letters indicating the character of office-seekers without a proper sense of the grave responsibility which such a course devolves upon them. A civil service reform which can correct this abuse is much desired. A salutary lesson has been taught the careless and the dishonest public servant in the great number of prosecutions and convictions of the last two years.

The Currency.

Among the evils growing out of the rebellion is that of an irredeemable currency. It is a duty, and one of the highest duties of Government, to secure to the citizen a medium of exchange of fixed, unvarying value. This implies a return to a specie basis, and no substitute for it can be devised. It should be commenced now and reached at the earliest practicable moment consistent with a fair regard to the interests of the debtor class. I earnestly recommend, then, such legislation as will insure a gradual return to specie payments, and put an immediate stop to fluctuations in the value of currency.

The Tariff.

The tax collected from the people has been reduced more than $50,000,000 per annum. By steadiness in our present course, there is no reason why, in a few short years, the national tax-gatherer may not disappear from the door of the citizen almost entirely. With the revenue stamp dispensed by postmasters in every community; a tax upon liquors of all sorts, and tobacco in all its forms; and by a wise adjustment of the tariff, which will put a duty only upon those articles which we could dispense with, known as luxuries, and on those which we use more of than we produce, revenue enough may be raised, after a few years of peace and consequent reduction of indebtedness, to fulfill all our obligations. A further reduction of expenses, in addition to a reduction of interest account may be relied on to make this practicable. Revenue reform, if it means this, has my hearty support.

The Tariff.

In readjusting the tariff, I suggest that a careful estimate be made of the amount of surplus revenue collected under the present laws, after providing for the current expenses of the Government, the interest account, and a sinking fund, and that this surplus be reduced in such a manner as to afford the greatest relief to the greatest number.

Public Lands.

The time-honored and beneficial policy of setting apart certain sections of public land for educational purposes in the new States should be continued.

I renew my recommendation that the public lands be regarded as a heritage to our children, to be disposed of only as required for occupation and to actual settlers.

The true prosperity and greatness of a nation is to be found in the elevation and education of its laborers.

National Credit.

The United States should not loan their credit in aid of any enterprise undertaken by States or corporations, nor grant lands in any instance, unless the projected work is of acknowledged national importance.

The Indians.

I recommend liberal appropriations to carry out the Indian peace policy, not only because it is humane, Christian-like and economical, but because it is right.

Equal Rights to All.

The citizen of the United States, whether native or adopted, who discharges his duty to his country, is entitled to its complete protection. While I have a voice in the direction of affairs, I shall not consent to imperil this sacred right by conferring it upon fictitious or fraudulent claimants.

Polygamy.

Neither polygamy nor any other violation of existing statutes will be permitted within the territory of the United States. It is not with the religion of the self-styled Saints that we are now dealing, but with their practices. They will be protected in the worship of God, according to the dictates of their consciences, but they will not be permitted to violate the laws under the cloak of religion.

The Southern States.

More than six years having elapsed since the last hostile gun was fired between the armies then arrayed against each other—one for the perpetuation, the other for the destruction, of the Union—it may well be considered whether it is not now time that the disabilities imposed by the Fourteenth Amendment should be removed. That amendment does not exclude the ballot, but only imposes the disability to hold offices upon certain classes. When the purity of the ballot is secure, majorities are sure to elect officers reflecting the views of the majority. I do not see the advantage or propriety of excluding men from office merely because they were, before the rebellion, of standing and character sufficient to be elected to positions requiring them to take oaths to support the Constitution, and admitting to eligibility those entertaining precisely the same views, but of less standing in their communities. It may be said that the former violated an oath, while the latter did not. The latter did not have it in their power to do so. If they had taken this oath it cannot be doubted they would have broken it as did the former class. If there are any arrest criminals, distinguished above all others for the part they took in opposition to the Government, they might, in the judgment of Congress, be excluded from such an amnesty. This subject is submitted for your careful consideration.

The condition of the Southern States is unhappily, not such as all true patriotic citizens would like to see. Social ostracism for opinion's sake, personal violence or threats toward persons entertaining political views opposed to those entertained by the majority of the old citizens, prevent immigration and the flow of much-needed capital into the States lately in rebellion. It will be a happy condition of the country when the old citizens of those States will take an interest in public affairs, promulgate ideas honestly entertained, vote for men representing these views, and secure to the same freedom of expression and ballot in those entertaining different political convictions.

The General Policy of the Administration.

On my assuming the responsible duties of Chief Magistrate of the United States, it was with the conviction that three things were essential to its peace, prosperity, and fullest development. First among these, is strict integrity in fulfilling all our obligations. Second, to secure protection to the person and property of the citizen of the United States, in each and every portion of our common country, wherever he may choose to move, without reference to original nationality, religion, color, or politics, demanding of him only obedience to the laws and proper respect for the rights of others. Third, union of all the States—with equal rights—indestructible by any constitutional means.

In conclusion, I would sum up the policy of the Administration to be a thorough enforcement of every law; a faithful collection of every tax provided for; economy in the disbursement of the same; a prompt payment of every debt of the nation; a reduction of taxes as rapidly as the requirements of the country will admit; reductions of taxation and tariff, to be so arranged as to afford the greatest relief to the greatest number; honest and fair dealings with all other peoples, to the end that war, with all its blighting consequences, may be avoided, but without surrendering any right or obligation due to us; a reform in the management of Indians, and in the whole civil service of the country; and, finally, in securing a pure, unprejudiced ballot, where every man entitled to cast a vote may do so, just once, at each election, without fear, or intimidation, or prosecution on account of his political faith, activity, or color.

THE ILLINOIS CAMPAIGN.

Great Enthusiasm at Bloomington—A Powerful Speech by Gov. Oglesby—Success of the Republican Ticket Announced.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 14.—The Republican mass meeting at Bloomington, yesterday, was an enthusiastic affair. Notwithstanding the intense heat and the fact that the farmers were all in the middle of harvest, there was a large assemblage of people. Gov. Oglesby made an earnest, soul-stirring speech, which was attentively listened to by not less than eight thousand ladies and gentlemen. He gave a lucid exposition of the principles of the Republican Party and administered some stinging rebukes to those who have turned traitors. The speech throughout was full of that power and magnetism which are the distinguishing features of Gov. Oglesby's extempore efforts. In the evening Gen. Beveridge and Hon. J. K. Edsall addressed an immense audience at the Court-house-square. The speakers were frequently interrupted by spontaneous and continued applause. The enthusiasm at this meeting presented a striking contrast to that at Judge Trumbull's Democratic meeting, at Lincoln, on the preceding evening, which was a small affair, and devoid of enthusiasm.

Reports from all parts of the State give renewed assurances of the success of the Republican ticket.

INDIANA.

Washington Depew Declines the Democratic Nomination for Lieutenant-Governor.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 14.—Washington Depew, the millionaire Methodist, was the Democracy nominated for Lieutenant-Governor, peremptorily declines this morning in a card sent to the Journal, the Republican paper of this city. The declination was some weeks ago placed in the hands of the Democratic State Committee, but was held for publication after the Baltimore Convention. The Committee had hoped to get Depew to accept, and is now in deep distress. The Liberals claim the nomination, but it is said the Democracy will adhere to the determination to accede nothing to that element.

THE UXBRIDGE BANK ROBBERY.

Particulars of the Daring Affair—Five Persons Suspected Based—The Robbers Barricaded and Compelled to Open the Safe.

From the Worcester (Mass.) Gazette, July 13.

At about 2 o'clock this morning, the family of Mr. E. W. Heywood, cashier of the Blackstone National Bank, in Uxbridge, were aroused by the presence of four men in the house, and were all bound and gagged before either could make an alarm. The family consisted of Mr. Heywood, his daughter and grand-daughter, a colored servant, and a young man named Charles Weston, teller in the bank. The men gained entrance to the house by using a ladder, which they brought from another building, some forty rods distant. By this they entered an open window in the second story, and each member of the family was seized and overmastered at the same instant.

Having thus secured silence in the house, the men took Mr. Weston to the bank, which is located in Taft's block, about forty rods from the residence of Mr. Heywood. Here they compelled him, by threats of torture and death, to open the vault. A lamp is always left lighted at night in the banking room, and the operators allowed this to remain burning. While three of them remained with Weston, the fourth went into the vault and took possession of all the valuables there deposited, which fortunately, if did not amount to a very great amount. They secured $12,000 in current funds, which is a greater sum than is usually kept in the bank, but it being pay day at the mills in the town, the money had been brought for that purpose. There were no notes, bonds or other valuables in the vault.

Having plundered the vault, the men took Weston back to the residence of Mr. Heywood, and bound him securely, and after inspecting all the prisoners, and finding them securely bound, they left the house by the front door. One of the party would stay by till daylight, and if any movement was made the whole family would be murdered.

The prisoners remained in their painful and constrained positions till five o'clock this morning, when the little girl succeeded in working the gag from her mouth, and in reaching a window, when she called to a hired man who had come to do the morning work about the barn. They were soon liberated, and the whole village was electrified by the startling news, but no trace of the men could be found, save that a party of four in one vehicle inquired of a boy the road they were driving in the direction of Milford. Officers were notified at once and a strict search is in progress, but from present indications the daring rogues seem quite likely to escape with their booty.

Mr. Heywood, the cashier, is quite aged, over seventy years old, and the shock of the assault and the exposure and exertion of the night severely tell by him. The bank has several times been assaulted by burglars in years past, but all now has had the good fortune to escape.

THE WEATHER.

Synopsis and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, July 14—8 P. M.—The barometer has fallen from Tennessee to New-England, the lakes, and the North-west, being lowest over the latter. It has risen considerably over the South Atlantic States, where it is highest. Cloudy weather has generally prevailed from Florida and the South Atlantic coast to the Ohio Valley, with light, fresh easterly to southerly winds; clear and partially cloudy weather over the New-England and Middle States and below the Ohio Valley, with light winds from the southeast. The temperature has risen west from Wisconsin to the Rocky and Middle Atlantic coast. Two rises have risen at Freeport, and continued falling at Cincinnati and Omaha. Telegraphic reports for this evening have not as yet been received from the stations on the Western Gulf Coast, Upper Michigan and Minnesota.

PROBABILITIES.

Falling barometer, fresh to brisk southerly to easterly winds, increasing cloudiness and areas of rain extend on Monday from Tennessee to Lake Erie, the upper lakes and the north-west; fresh easterly to southwesterly winds and increasing cloudiness for the New-England and Middle States, with possible areas of rain from Virginia and Pennsylvania to Southern New-England, followed by westerly winds, partly cloudy weather and occasional rains or rain for the south Atlantic States, followed by clearing weather on Monday afternoon or night; westerly winds and generally clear weather for the Gulf States.

City Meteorological Record.

The following observations show the temperature, &c., yesterday, as recorded by Saunders & Walker, at the Central Park Mineral Spring:

The following record will show the changes in the temperature yesterday, as indicated by the thermometer at Dickinson's drug-store, No. 2 Park-row: 3 A. M., 70°; 6 A. M., 70°; 9 A. M., 72°; 12 M., 80°; 3 P. M., 80°; 6 P. M., 70°; 9 P. M., 68°; 12 P. M., 70°; average temperature yesterday, 75.

THE CANVASS.

Spirit of the Press on the Political Situation.

What Hoffman Failed to Say—The Stars and Bars to be Respected—Greeley's Secret Bargain.

Hoffman's "Local Causes."

Gov. Hoffman said at the Baltimore Convention, that New-York had a Democratic Governor, but the Legislature was lost last year through local causes. What he failed to say the Troy Times hints at here: "He did not dilate upon those local causes at all, nor even mention the fact that many of the friends and prominent supporters of himself were indicted for stealing the public funds, and for the most systematic and audacious robbery ever witnessed. He also failed to state that he has been the intimate associate of these indicted robbers, and has acted with them politically, and as Gov. Grant has signed nearly every bill which they got through a bribed Legislature, in order to accomplish these nefarious ends. He also failed to tell that he is the candidate of these tainted politicians for the United States Senate, and that the Democratic leadership is tried and chicanery seems to be in full force."

Who Made the Bloody Chasm?

The Southern Greeleyites are fond of iterating his remark about the bloody chasm created by the war. On this point the Lewiston (Me.) Journal makes a gentle reminder, thus: "They forget to add that the said 'bloody chasm' was their own work. But for their moral madness there would have been no war. It is kind in them, nevertheless, that they should be ready to say they are willing to forgive a North, for saying it was they and themselves, provided if the North would send to the rear Grant and other reminders of Union triumphs, and let Jeff. Davis and his friends come back to Congress to rule the nation. How kind this is! We think we see a general hand-shaking across such a close-up 'chasm.'"

The Stars and Bars.

The Charleston (S. C.) News looks upon the nomination of Greeley as the dawning of the day when "the North and the South shall alike respect the Stars and Bars as the flag under which dauntless Americans bled and died," and says that when that day comes the South and the North "will love the Stars and Stripes as the flag of their common country."

"Mike" Norton Enthusiastic for Greeley.

As has been stated, Mike Norton, the defeated Tammany candidate for the State Senate, is building high hopes upon the election of Greeley. His champions in the Seventh Assembly District now speak of him as a candidate for the Assembly, and boast that they are willing to bet odds that he will be elected.

Pointed Playbill Poetry.

It was noticeable that Reuben E. Fenton, who was in town on Saturday, kept away from the Liberal Republican head-quarters. The honorable gentleman is not so prominent in public places, and does not raise his voice so often for the Sage of Chappaqua as do the admirers of Jeff. Davis on the other side of the "bloody chasm." He knows how to work behind the scenes without making a noise about it.

Greeley's Bargain Last October.

The account of Greeley's corrupt secret bargain with the Democrats, begun last October, explains to the Ogdensburg Journal several things which till now have been great mysteries to it. It says: "It would explain his trip to Texas, his speech at Memphis, his eulogy of the Southern Confederate soldiers, his pilgrimage to Atlanta; his letter to the editor of the Conscession, in which he says the mistake of the Democratic Party in 1866 was in not nominating Salmon P. Chase; his intimation that Mr. Chase would not do in 1872, and his conduct in constantly holding up Gen. Grant, as a terror to be repeated, if the Democratic Party dared to make a straight nomination in 1872."

Political Letter-Writing at the Glenham Hotel Yesterday.

A number of delegates were locked up in the Liberal Republican National Committee rooms, Glenham Hotel, yesterday, writing letters to their constituents about their Chappaqua experience on Saturday. Extremely rose-colored, indeed quite sanguinary, views of the political out-look for the Tammany candidates were conveyed to the rustic innocents in these epistles. Among those who were there busy, waiting time was Ex-Gov. Allen, of Ohio; Gen. G. W. Anderson, Missouri; F. W. Bird, Massachusetts; Hon. Isaac P. Gray, Indiana; Hon. S. A. Riggs, Kansas; Gen. S. C. Burbridge, Kentucky; R. C. Jeffords, Mississippi; Hon. H. O. Kent, New-Hampshire; Judd P. Gadd, Vermont; Jasper W. Johnson, Oregon; Charles Delano, Illinois; Massachusetts; and Mr. Swords, Georgia.

What Shall They Name the Meeting?

The friends and few admirers of the new party lately born at Baltimore are in great trouble to get a name for it. Some of those suggested the Pottsville Miners' Journal enumerates thus: "Ex-Gov. Wise dubbed it 'Malatto Republicans.' Another suggests 'Odds and Ends;' another 'Conglomerates Scrubheads;' another the 'Progressive Tammanyites;' another 'Lops and Twists;' another 'Lumber Camp Manipulators;' another 'Grant's Rear Cavalry;' another 'Greeley's Chappaquack Rangers;' another 'Greeley's Democratic Dirt-eaters;' and another 'Greeley's Plundering Brigade.' Perhaps others desirous of helping them out of their difficulty might suggest something appropriate."

The Candidates' Supporters.

In the course of a consideration of the aspirations and tendencies of the two candidates for the Presidency, the Albany Evening Journal says: "Confidently, the chief pillar of Mr. Greeley's support in New-York is Tammany Hall. Its politicians are managing his canvass. If he should be elected, his Administration would be surrounded by their influence. Gen. Grant is sustained in this State by the great mass of those who stood by the Government through the war, and who won the victory for reform last year. Mr. Greeley is sustained by those who sympathized with the rebellion and who helped Tammany Hall last year in spite of the exposed contentions. What more can honest men ask to guide them than the contrast of these associations?"

Grant's Greatest Fault—He is in the Way at Ambitious Surbrands.

Speaking of Trumbull, Sumner, Chase and Greeley, the Salem (Mass.) Gazette says: "Here are a set of men who, down to the very brink of their apostacy, were the most inveterate friends on the continent; who assisted in molding all the measures that are now denounced by the Democracy, and who are more offensive to the conquered element at the South, and yet they are holding Gen. Grant responsible for them, when his only part in them was in accepting the measures of the dominant party, and performing his constitutional duty of enforcing the laws of the Union. Is it not anything but fair to Gen. Grant that these men are his principal offenders; is it that he stands in the way of so many candidates for the Presidency?"

The Race Strongly Contested Throughout.

Our telegrams have already mentioned that Mr. Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette, has denied the preposterous statement that he is engaged in getting the signatures of prominent Western politicians to a letter to Gen. Grant, asking him to retire from the Presidential contest. In a note to the Evening Post of this City, Mr. Smith makes his denial still more explicit, saying that the report had not the shade of a shadow of foundation, in fact. He adds further: "So far from seeking or desiring a change in the Republican Presidential ticket, I recommended Grant's nomination prior to the assembling of the Philadelphia Convention, and I regard him now as the strongest man that could, under all circumstances, have been chosen. I believe the great mass of the Republican voters are satisfied with the Administration. There is some dissatisfaction, of course, as there was with Mr. Lincoln's, but, as in his case, so in the case of Grant, the good features so far overshadow the bad, that we can well afford to stand by it, while laboring to reform whatever abuses may be found to exist. As for Greeley, I regard him as the weakest candidate the opposition could have nominated. He will not, in my opinion, poll as many votes as a straight Democrat, such as Hendricks, Thurman or Groesbeck, would have received. Either of the two last named would have been stronger in Ohio and Indiana than Greeley. As it is, the Republicans of those States are very well united. The so-called Liberal Republicans, who propose to Greeley use, for the most part, corruptionists or disappointed office-seekers, who have been a load upon the party, and whom the party can well afford to lose. On the other hand, the Democrats are not satisfied, and very many of them are thoroughly disgusted. I therefore regard Ohio and Indiana safe for Grant."

Good-By and Good Riddance.

With a clear conception of the true state of the case, the Philadelphia North American says: "The desertion of Greeley and Fenton to the enemy is really no loss. These men have been practically working with the Democrats for years, and at every State election they managed to organize a separate faction of their own, in order to aid the Democrats. The triumph last year was wholly independent of them, and would have been achieved just the same if they had been left in bright and the admiration of making; therefore be it

Resolved, That this Committee, having fully examined the political status of the colored men in the United States, and the relative merits of the candidates of both parties for the Presidency and Vice-Presidency, are fully convinced that the Republican Party is our party, and that we will support U. S. Grant and Henry Wilson as our standard-bearers during the present contest.

Resolved, That this Committee confer forthwith with the Central Committee relative to taking part in the contemplated Republican meeting, to be held between Cedar and Rivington-streets, and that a

"Tammany Bononds."

Questions pertinent to the time are thus put by the Cleveland (Ohio) Herald of Friday last: "Was not Horace Greeley himself the friend of some of the leading Tammanyites? Did not the Tribune share in the 'tusk money' distributed by the public thieves from the proceeds of their robberies? Did not Greeley, in the Tribune, insist that Garvey, the dishonest plasterer, was 'an honest man' after the public had notorious proven him incontestably a robber and the accomplice of robbers, and but a short time before Garvey himself appeared in Court and confessed himself such? Did the Tribune, then avowedly under the absolute control of Horace Greeley, say one word against the Tammany frauds until after public indignation had become irresistible and overwhelming? Did it not then turn public attention in other directions as speedily as possible, and thus give the battered Tammanyites a chance to 'haul off for repairs'? When the storm had but partially blown over, were not the Tammany leaders smiling upon Greeley's Tribune, and Greeley's Tribune waging bitter warfare upon those chiefly instrumental in evoking the people's wrath against Tammany? Will anybody not Tammany believe, seriously and jovially to the nomination of Greeley?"

The Prospect in Pennsylvania.

The Philadelphia North American and Gazette, one of the most cautious and intelligent newspapers in the country, in a thoughtful article concerning the political prospects in what are termed the doubtful States, speaks thus of its own State: "So far as Pennsylvania is concerned, we believe she will be able to give a good account of herself as usual. We have just passed through a contest for forty thousand votes at a mere Republican primary election, and at the regular election in November we fully expect to be able to poll seventy thousand. We shall in October speak out in such a manner that New-York, New-Jersey and Connecticut will be inspired to compete with us in November. The defections of our friends are too few and feeble as to attract but little attention."

Greeley Colleagues in Missouri.

The Rochester Democrat publishes a brief call, signed by less than fifty names, for a meeting of the "Liberal Republicans" of Monroe County. The Democrat says it shows the utter insignificance the movement possesses in the country, and it adds: "The name of Hon. Henry R. Gibbons, which was originally attached to this call, has been erased therefrom. Thus rapidly drop away the men of character from the consciousness movement. Our citizens will recognize convicts and other disreputable names in the list, strangely sandwiched in with some respectable but misguided gentlemen. Grant's majority in 1868 in this county will be doubled this Fall."

Tammany the Master.

The readiness with which the thieves and the political gamblers of New-York respond to the nomination of Greeley, appalls the honest people of the country. The Augusta (Me.) Journal is startled by it, and says: "Tammany supports Greeley! What news for the ears of Republicans! To what lower depth could the insane love of office sink Mr. Greeley! Tammany, the slave-driver, Greeley, the slave. Greeley desired office and sought the assistance of Tammany. An unholy alliance was formed. Tammany nominated him at Cincinnati, again at Baltimore, and if Mr. Greeley can be elected he will pay of the score by giving Tammany control at Washington as it has had in New-York."

A Confederate Reunion.

Even the proposed reunion of a rebel regiment is made the occasion by Greeleyites in the South to sneer at the Union. It is the fashion there to speak of the Northerners as oppressors of the South, and to socially ostracize all Ex-Confederates who loyally accept the situation and join hands with the Union Republicans of the nation. Thus, referring to the proposed reunion of a Mississippi regiment, the Jackson (Miss.) Clarion, which is edited by a man who was an officer in the rebel army, and is now an active partisan of Greeley, says: "We have heard from good authority that a member of the Clarion Company Company has in his possession the bullet-riddled battle-flag around which the old Fourteenth never failed to rally, matters not how hot the fire might have been. This flag should also be at the reunion. It will be permanently pleasant for the survivors to meet, and hear each member of that gallant band, who survived the war, has proven false to his old companions in arms, and joined the oppressors of Mississippi. His name we forbear, in pity, to mention."

A Democratic Prediction—Greeley's Certain Defeat.

In its unswerving loyalty to the old Democratic Party, the Detroit Free Press steadfastly refuses to support Greeley, anticipating a speedy desertion of true Democrats from the Greeley ranks, as soon as the outer second shower and reaction set in. Greeley's chances of success, it predicts, will in this way "grow daily beautifully less, and as soon as it is seen that success is impossible, the floating and easily moved or polluted element will join the unwavering, honest men, who cannot be sold to Horace Greeley, or to any other Radical." The regular Democratic Convention in Louisville in September will take account approved by the Free Press, and on this head it says: "Our ticket may grow an organized opposition with its own ticket—or out of it will grow an individual action that will defeat Greeley in almost every State. No third ticket can probably succeed in electors; its candidate, but it can certainly preserve the Democratic Party and its organization, by organizing committees and giving countenance and support to true and honest voters on its side. If this is neglected or deemed unnecessary, and the true Democracy are left the alternative of not voting or voting for Grant, the result will be the complete defeat of Greeley and a reorganization of the Democratic Party under the above principles, and controled by those who are faithful to them."

Public Virtue Rewarded.

From the Boston Post, of Saturday.

Formerly when a candidate was to be commended to the support of the people it was customary to speak with pride of his fidelity to his convictions. "Here is a man," it would be said, "who at all times, and under the strongest temptations, has firmly stood by the principles he believed to be sound and true, and the measures he held to be for the welfare of his country. His services have received no reward, but they have not been the less freely rendered. His party has been ungrateful, but he has not deserted it on that account, for he believed its ascendancy to be essential to the prosperity of the country. His worth has been tried; his public virtue is incorruptible; let us therefore give him an enthusiastic support."

Such was the old fashion of recommending a candidate. Something of the sort was said of Henry Clay by his friends, and said, with great emphasis. He had little cause to thank them for any support they gave him at those times when by means of that support he might have been carried into the Presidency; but he never proved faithless to his principles or to his friends on this account.

All this is changed. A candidate for the Presidency of the United States is now commended to the public favor because he finds it is easy to change his coat. "What has he done?" it is asked; "what display of public virtue has he made, to entitle him to the highest office which the people can bestow?"

The World newspaper, which has come over to the support of Mr. Greeley, answers that Mr. Greeley has always been a zealous champion of the Republican Party, and his whole life long the bitter enemy of the Democratic Party; that his service has never experienced his merits nor rewarded his services with the honors it had to bestow, and that, instead of remaining faithful under this neglect, he has turned from the Republican Party to the Democratic for the rewards which his Republican allies persistently denied him. In short, he has deserted the Republican cause and embraced the cause of those adversaries for the sake of office. He is a turn-coat, a renegade, bought with a price—the nomination to the Presidency.

Here are the words of the World, which we have only translated into a little plainer English. Mr. We recall the expression—for nothing can be plainer than the meaning of the passage we quote:

"Having failed to secure just appreciation for his great services to the Republican Party, which is more indebted to him than to any other man, and finding that his old opponents were willing to give him the distinction he seems and is really fitted by his character and talents, he prefers the honorable appreciation of opponents to the ungracious snubbing of professed friends. How easy it would have been for the Republicans to keep this champion! But having alienated him by thankless ingratitude and slight services, they have no reason to complain that he has made an alliance with their old enemies and his."

Having nominated Mr. Greeley for the Presidency and received his acceptance of the nomination, the men who managed the Baltimore Convention expect to hold a proprietary interest in him. It should be remembered that at the Cincinnati Convention of Liberal Republicans, it was found impossible to obtain a vote making the nomination of Mr. Greeley unanimous. There was a sullen silence on the part of many and an indignant "No" from others. At the Baltimore Convention no such difficulty was experienced. He was received into full fellowship with the party against which he had launched his fiercest invectives—received without a dissenting voice. He is to be rewarded for his apostacy with the post he most covets, and then he is to be owned by his new allies. The World, from which we have just quoted, says:

"With the Democratic Cabinet which Mr. Greeley will be constrained to appoint, and the Democratic Congress which will be elected with him, there will be an opportunity for reform of administrative and legislative abuses."

Here is a declaration of what the men who nominated Mr. Greeley at Baltimore expect of him. He is to be "constrained" to appoint a Cabinet of their selection—forced to administer the Government through their agents—compelled to place in office men of their choosing. When a Frank becomes a Mussulman in Turkey the rite of circumcision is first administered, and then the new convert is led to worship in one of the mosques of the false prophet. Mr. Greeley has submitted to the ceremony which marks the renunciation of his old political faith, and has now only to conform—either willingly, or, if not willingly, then by compulsion—to the practices of the political religion into which he has been solemnly received.

Gov. Oglesby, of Illinois, will make several speeches in Indiana during the present month.

The Massachusetts Republican State Convention will probably be held in Boston about the 1st of September.

A Rondout Democrat hung his flag at half-mast when he learned the result of the Convention at Baltimore.

The Republican Convention for the Seventh District of Virginia decided not to make any nomination for Congress.

The female operators in a factory at Hallowell, Me., have thrown out a large Republican flag bearing the names of Grant and Wilson.

Congressman Tyner, of Indiana, expresses the opinion that Greeley will not receive more than 100 to 150 Republican votes in his district, comprising eight counties.

Hon. James Wilson, the Republican candidate for Congress in the Fifth District of Iowa, is the Speaker of the present House of Representatives of that State.

The Troy Times says: "The claims of the Greeley men are extravagant and preposterous. What is asserted in respect to Troy, for example, is conspicuously untrue."

The address of the Louisiana Reform Party speaks of Gov. Warmoth as the worst enemy the people of Louisiana have ever had. Warmoth is the leader of the Greeley Party in the State.

A country paper reports that the cellar of the New-Hampshire house where Greeley was born is to be cut up into small pieces and sold out to Democrats as good pieces in which to indulge after election.

A gentleman now at Saratoga, who has recently traveled over Illinois, and knows its political feeling thoroughly, says that there are more Democrats for Grant than there are Republicans for Greeley in that State.

The Richmond State Journal speaks a good word for Ex-Gov. Henry A. Wise. It says: "His whole influence since the war has been notably in favor of loyal acquiescence in its results. No man in all the country cares less for notoriety."

A resident of Sandusky County, Ohio, says that he knows of fifty Democrats in his own township who have declared that they will not vote for Greeley under any circumstances. Some of them will vote for Grant; many of them will not vote at all.

The Jackson Citizen, the oldest and ablest daily paper in Central Michigan, and heretofore regarded as the organ of Gov. Blair, refuses to follow him in his present erratic course, and promises to continue to advocate the election of President Grant to the best of its ability.

At a meeting of the "National" Liberal Republican Committee, at the Glenham House, Friday evening, the following gentlemen were enrolled as a Finance Committee: James E. Bowen, of New-Jersey; Chairman; Gen. Burbridge, of Kentucky, and George W. Anderson, of Missouri.

Gen. Fred. Hooker, of Illinois, who was a staunch supporter of the Liberal movement until the farce of nominating Greeley as the Liberal candidate was enacted at Cincinnati, has written a letter to the Journal-City Weekly, in which he declines to yield his convictions to the political contradictions who have persistent gone in their performance, and advises all true Republicans to stand aloof from the contest.

Fatal Affray Between Brothers in Brooklyn.

Yesterday afternoon Patrick McLaughlin, residing in a locality known as "The Patch," in Brooklyn, was arrested for felonious assault on his brother, John. The latter is represented as being a British fellow, and when the affray took place, was kicking and abusing his mother, who he had knocked on the floor, and was pulling about by the hair of her head. Patrick, who came in at the moment, was so exasperated at this unnatural conduct, that he armed a heavy hickory club, and rushing on his brother, felled him as a stew. The wounded man, whose skull is probably fatally fractured, was taken to the Long Island College Hospital. Patrick was locked up.

THE POLITICAL FIELD.

Pennsylvania, Virginia and Northern New-York.

The Feeling Made by the Baltimore Convention—Magnet of the Best-Fixed Democracy—Confidence of the Republicans Here Based.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The Eastern Portion of the State—The Democracy Dissatisfied with the Baltimore Nominees—Republicanism to Triumph in October and November.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HARRISBURG, Friday, July 12, 1872.

The result of the Baltimore Convention while not unexpected to the Democracy in Eastern Pennsylvania, brought consternation to almost every Democrat in the counties east of the Alleghanies. Always heretofore the Democrats have depended upon the Counties of Berks, Montgomery, Lehigh, Bucks and Northampton for invariable majorities for the regular candidates. They have been successful in obtaining the desired majorities in these counties from year to year by the champions of their local and State tickets. The solid Democratic vote is annually cast in this southern tier for the exponents of Democratic principles, no matter what charges of fraud and corruption are made against them. Of this the leaders of the party in this State are perfectly well aware, and their great trouble has been that they have not been able to convince their brethren in other States of the importance of preserving, by the retaining of the old doctrines, the allegiance of these voters. So it was that the Pennsylvania delegation held on stubbornly at the Convention, and so it is that hardly a single Democratic organ east of the Alleghanies has accepted Greeley and the Liberal platform. Since the nomination, the opposition to Greeley, while it has necessarily ceased to find a place in the "organs," finds no decisive expression from the people as before that event. The Democrats of Berks County have always been taught to believe Horace Greeley little better than a political murderer, cut-throat, and the like, and now will not be persuaded otherwise. A class of people which may be depended upon for the support of any principles which they have adopted as a part of their faith, they are correspondingly slow to change their doctrines and their votes. They much prefer staying away from the poles to voting contrary to their ancient belief. It is a most fortunate thing for our town, State and national ticket in Pennsylvania that Greeley received the nomination and accepted the surrender of the Democratic Party. In the first place, it will certainly decrease the Democratic vote. In our county (Montgomery) the regular Democratic majority is about eight hundred. But now throughout the county the Democrats growl bitterly at the "sale," and the majority, taking the position of the Chicago Times, refuse to indorse the nominee in any form or shape. This will reduce the Democratic vote considerably. But the real fight will be made in the October elections. Buckalew or Hartranft will virtually decide the question of the next Presidency. The relative strength of the two through the State has been erroneously estimated by very many correspondents. Much stress has been laid upon the fact that Buckalew is a very able and honest man, and therefore a formidable competitor. The opposite is true. The Democrats could scarcely have nominated a man less calculated to call forth the votes of the masses. He is personally unpopular in his own party. His record in the State effectually cuts off the soldiers' vote; he has never done anything to secure the working man's vote, and his want of sympathy frustrates his chances of a cordial support in any section. The Republican Party have nothing to fear from Buckalew's opposition. It is a fact that the Republicans of this section are more united and strong more earnestly to work than ever before. The Press compilated, not long ago, an astonishing table of figures, according to which Hartranft was to lose some eleven thousand votes in the State. Since the publication of that table every county in which the Press prophesied a Republican loss Wardemann, through its local press, the fact and given figures in refutation. In the event of any third candidate in the field this Fall, Pennsylvania will repeat her vote of 1860, when the Republicans carried the State by such an overwhelming majority. In that year our county, which, prior to that time and since, has been reliably Democratic, gave a plurality of votes for Lincoln of 2,386. The same was characteristic of several other Democratic candidates. Hartranft here is exceedingly popular, and several of the most prominent Democrats in Norristown have joined the Hartranft Club. We expect to carry the county for him in October, and for Grant, with an increased majority, in November. Hartranft's majority when elected to his present position was independent of this eastern districts, Philadelphia, owing to local causes, casting her vote against him. This Fall, however, she is sure to give him a handsome majority, and more than counterbalance any falling off in other portions of the State. In Lancaster County, about which the greatest anxiety has been felt, is coming out all right. West of the Alleghanies the feeling for Hartranft is constantly increasing. All recognize the importance of the coming campaign, and are determined not to be defeated by the machinations of any combination of disappointed politicians. The success of the Republicans in this year as always. The private dissensions in her midst have only served to bind together more closely and effectively her working citizens, and their united efforts will carry the State safely past all dangers which may beset it.

Western Pennsylvania—Prospects of the Contest—The Colored Vote for Grant.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Thursday, July 11, 1872.

The political situation in the western part of the State, since my last, has been materially unchanged, i. e., to the outside world. To be sure meetings are held, ward meetings and clubs organized, but, taken as a whole, nothing worthy of note since the great Grant-Wilson meeting here, has presented itself to comment as large upon. The present nested term has, doubtless, something to do with it. Then again, very many have preferred waiting to see what would be done in Baltimore before expressing themselves openly. And here I may say that many Democrats who would have opposed Grant had a straight-out ticket been made, can now be counted as in opposition to Greeley. But "there is always a calm before a storm," and in a few weeks we may look for a formal declaration of war.

As sound to those who are to stump the State for Grant and Wilson this Summer and Fall, we will have the very best material the nation will produce. On the 20th inst. we will have another rousing meeting, and Hon. Belucius Garfielde, member of Congress from Washington Territory, Judge Shannon, Mr. Van Nota, and others will address the assemblage then to be held.

Yesterday may be set down as "Black Wednesday" in the sense issue of the Tribune & Sun, as the second of political events. In this city the news of the action of the Baltimore Convention was received with anything but satisfaction. The Post, the Democratic organ of this part of the State, indicated anything but gratification with the result. The "anything to beat Grant" organ, the Leader, manifested some little satisfaction, but this can be accounted for from the fact that one of its editors' blood relatives had been refused a little official pap at the hands of the present Administration. To sum up the reception of the action of the Democrats in Baltimore, in this city, I can safely say there was not a shout of joy, not a cannon fired, nor a smiling countenance. In a word, it fell like a wet blanket.

Much inquiry, of late, has been made in regard to what action the colored voters of the State will take in the coming canvass. I have recently talked with a number of prominent colored politicians, and from their talk, I may safely put it down that a no-to-the will support and vote for Grant. One of the most prominent colored men in this city says that the blessings brought to his race as the result of the recent terrible war of the rebellion, has cost her much blood and treasure, them at this day to support the party which held them in bondage. The Republican Party deserves and absolutely has the unshaken confidence of the colored people everywhere in the United States. The colored man added: "We want our united votes to go to show our gratitude to the man who gave us our freedom, and we want to see him elected President of the United States next November."

Very extensive preparations are in progress for the Soldiers' and Sailors' National Convention to be held in this city on the 17th of September next. An address has been issued by the Veterans' National Committee, and is calculated to revive the old spark of patriotism, and tend to draw hither a large attendance from all sections of the country to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the battle of Antietam, and come together once more for last, sinking all sectional differences, take their stand now, as then, for their country, and fought and bled and died. Labor for her honor and glory.

In regard to our State ticket we will have the same strong faith that we will elect Gen. Hartranft over his competitor, Buckalew, the man who never gave a single dollar toward suppressing the rebellion, or even uttered a word of cheer for our soldiers as they marched to the field of battle, while Gen. Hartranft led his men into the hottest of the fight, and shared with them the common lot of a soldier on the field of battle.

VIRGINIA.

The Contests of the Last Three Years—Democrats for Grant—An Exciting Campaign in Prospect.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

RICHMOND, Thursday, July 11, 1872.

Thus far the Old Dominion has been counted as one of the States certain for Greeley and Brown, except by a few Republicans who are well acquainted with that section which has always given a large Democratic majority—I mean that portion of the State lying West of the Blue Ridge, and known geographically as the Valley and South-west. It has been impossible since the Wells and Walker campaign to form any correct estimate of the relative strength of the two parties in Virginia; even then it was impossible to ascertain the number of Republicans who voted for Walker, indeed to do so by his lying declarations that he was a Liberal Republican. The best informed men of the Republican Party are unwilling to acknowledge a majority in the State against us of more than ten thousand. In the Wells campaign, Walker was elected by about eighteen thousand majority. The unpopularity of the "test oath" and "disfranchising" clauses of the Constitution, virtually indorsed by Wells, induced a large majority of the white Republicans of the western part of the State to prefer and vote for Walker. Of this class we are not far wrong when we estimate the number at five thousand. Since that campaign, the running of independent candidates, who frequently received the Republican vote, has made it impossible to ascertain the relative strength of the two parties. Conceding to the Democrats a clear majority of ten thousand in the State, the dissatisfaction among the leaders, and the number who have declared in favor of Grant and Wilson, induce us to believe we can carry Virginia this Fall.

DEMOCRATS FOR GRANT.

Already more than fifty prominent members of the Democratic Party have declared their willingness to canvass for Grant and Wilson, while not a single Republican of any prominence, influence or respectability has gone over to Greeley, except Franklin Stearns, of this City, and Lewis McKenzie, of Alexandria. These two gentlemen have been so wavering and unreliable as to prepare the public mind for their somersault, and their going to Greeley has neither surprised or disheartened the friends of the Administration.

A HOT CAMPAIGN.

Our State Central Committee will meet in this City on the 16th, and as its members are made up by men from every section of the State, the wants and necessities of the party will be looked after and steps taken to commence the campaign in earnest. Every indication leads us to expect a red-hot fight all over the South and particularly in Virginia and North Carolina. The Democrats are preparing to fight as in their usual bullying, abusive style, but as we have learned "barking dogs seldom bite," and how to manage the "curses," we don't fear them much. The Republicans will open the campaign regularly on the 24th by a grand mass-meeting in Richmond, on which occasion Hon. Henry Wilson, Frederick Douglass and other distinguished speakers will be present. The State Executive Committee will have charge of the arrangements for this meeting, and are determined to make it a most imposing affair. The different railroads leading into Richmond will provide excursion trains for persons from a distance, and we confidently expect at least twenty thousand persons from the country to be present.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Gen. Henry A. Wise's letter is doing wonderful work against Greeley, and although many of his former admirers now pronounce him crazy, he is more universally admired in the country, and has more influence with the masses than any half-dozen men in Virginia. We had hoped to secure his valuable services as a canvasser for Gen. Grant, but in his letter he declares he will support neither of the candidates. Hon. John S. Millson, of Norfolk, has been invited to accept the position of Elector at Large on the Grant ticket, and I have no doubt he will accept. He is one of our ablest speakers and will do good service in the campaign. By the recent Democratic gerrymander the Republicans were given only two districts out of nine, in each of which the regular nominee will be opposed by independent Republicans, who are put forward by the opposition as a ruse, trying to defeat the Republican Party. Hon. James H. Platt, Jr., will, in spite of the combined efforts of spiteful Republicans and Democrats, be returned from the Second District—an honor which could not be conferred upon a more worthy or valuable member of the party.

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY.

Prospects of the Canvass in the Banner County of the State—Cheering News from the Republican Strongholds.

From Our Own Correspondent.

OGDENSBURG, Monday, July 8, 1872.

At the organization of the Republican Party in 1855, St. Lawrence County took her position at the head of the Republican column, and has ever since maintained that proud post, increasing, in each succeeding hotly contested election, her large majority. At the last Presidential election, this majority was forced to the very portals of eight thousand. The defection of the self-styled Liberals who have gone off after the Cincinnati candidates, and the moral certainty that the Baltimore Convention will adopt Mr. Greeley as the candidate of the "anything-to-beat-Grant" politicians, has led to considerable speculation as to the probable disposition of the people. At the time of the announcement of the Cincinnati nominations, the gentleman who went as a self-appointed delegate to that gathering indulged in great expectations and predictions. A careful survey of the field has convinced them that their estimates of their ability to do in St. Lawrence County are not to be realized. Potsdam is the only point in the county where they have attempted to organize. The poor success there has not fired their hearts. Gen. E. A. Merritt spoke to this city something over a week ago for the purpose of organizing a Greeley and Brown Club. The time was not deemed auspicious, and it was deferred. Information received from all parts of the county shows that there has been at no time since the nomination three hundred Republicans who have mentioned Mr. Greeley's name with any degree of respect.

The Republicans have purposely delayed organization till the upshot of the Baltimore Convention can be definitely known. A good many Democrats still hope against hope that some sort of a miracle will defeat the indorsements of Greeley at their National Convention. At least one-fourth of the party in this county will sacrifice the Grant ticket, as soon as their party committee has selected one, and it is desirable to give them an opportunity to come into the organization of our Grant and Wilson Clubs. In some of the towns the enthusiastic Republicans who could act well have commenced the organization of Grant and Wilson clubs. Potsdam and Stockholm have so organized. I estimate that we will receive accessions from the old Democratic Party in the ratio of three for every Republican who goes off after Greeley. There is no loose guess-work about this estimate. I can instance several cases where men who were a Republican ticket who have positively sworn that they will vote for Grant in Greeley becomes the Democratic candidate. Other Republicans have received equally strong assurances from others. I believe the stampede will become general just as soon as the Democratic Party commits the stupendous folly contemplated. The loud cheers for Greeley which some of the easy-virtue Democrats were uttering some time since have suddenly subsided. The confidence with which they looked for division in our ranks has given way

THE PEOPLE ON THE SITUATION.

Letter from a Carpet-Bagger.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have just been reading your excellent paper, and have been thinking that the strongest points against Greeley, with all soldiers and good Union men, should be that he is the candidate of the rebel Democracy. Now, no one can realize this as well as we who live here in the South among them. I belong to the class they call carpet-baggers. I served four years in the Union Army, and was mustered out of the service to remain in the South; sold all the property I had North, and brought all the money I had—about $20,000—here, and invested it in land, but was swindled in the deal, and lost every dollar. Since then have been trying to make an honest living, but have been abused and villified and attempts have been made to drive me from the county; threats have been made against my life, and all for what? Because I am and always will be a Republican. And yet all these rebel scoundrels, perjured villains, about now for Greeley, and tell us, "When he is elected then you will have to get up and get out of this." "Then we will have local self-government, and no United States Courts will be allowed to protect you." And what does this right to local self-government mean? It's the right of a lawyer to tell a colored witness on the stand, "You answer that question or you shall be whipped, Sir," as was done here the other day, and the unanimous rebel Judge on the Bench sneered and giggled and seemed to think it an excellent way to get evidence out of a nigger. No! God help all of us poor Republicans, both black and white, if we have to live under Greeley and his Democrats. We will be driven out and killed, and the poor blacks will be slaves again, not to be bought and sold, perhaps, but none the less slaves. Our need our friends North think that secession is dead, for it is not. Every rebel talks just as confident of the time when they will be free from the United States as though it were a certainty, and are more confident in that belief now than they have been at any time since the close of the war. CAMDEN, Ala., Friday, July 5, 1872.

A Traveler's Notes.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have been going around the country considerably of late, and in the course of my travels have observed several political phenomena, to which I should like to call the attention of your readers.

First, I have noticed that all the uncertain characters are going for Greeley. By uncertain characters I mean that class of erratic persons whose political status is a constant and most difficult conundrum, who are never satisfied with any party or policy, who are content with nothing but a change. In this class are included the long-haired philanthropists, who hold "that everything that is is wrong," the chronic screeheads, the general unreasonables and uncomfortables who are happy only when at swords' points with all the sound sense and right sentiment of the community. All these will support the Cincinnati ticket.

Again, I find that the solid men, the men with large interests at stake, are unanimous for Grant. These men only ask of a Government that it shall be firm and stable. They have no relish for political experiments. They want a safe and honest man. These men don't very much about the matter—they don't say very much about anything; but when the day comes, they will march to the polls in solid column and vote to a man for Grant and Wilson.

Finally, I have observed that respectable Democrats not that very easily when you talk to them about Horace Greeley. They do not all condemn the action of their party in nominating him; they do not say they will not support him at the polls; but they don't like to talk about him, and if anybody is so unfeeling as to refer to certain antecedents of the great sage, they get mad right away and sometimes swear.

THE WATCHER.

The Dissatisfied Democrats.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Two days after the Baltimore Convention the World had a two-column editorial on what it was pleased to call the "Bourbons," "dissatisfied Democrats," &c., &c., which was written with a good deal of care, as was marked by a candor or fairness which does not always distinguish the editorials of that paper. This article partly admits that the anti-Greeley Democrats hold the balance of power in this canvass. After referring to its persistent opposition to the old line wing of the Democratic Party, (that which was the peace Democracy,) it finally says:

"We believed, and still believe, that the party has no chance of success unless it can carry this element along with it; and we have accordingly deemed that no needless stumbling-block should be put in its way."

But Mr. Greeley was a "needless stumbling block," which was forced in the way of true Democrats by a handful of sore-head Radicals, who are generally the most extreme fire-eating portion of that party on all the issues that concern the fundamental principles of Democracy. A worse "stumbling block" could not possibly be put in the way of the true old-liners of the party. It is a "stumbling-block" which every sense of patriotism and self-respect calls upon them to remove from their path. They cannot accept it without dishonor and an upbraiding conscience. They will not accept it, and the following extract from the World's article shows that the editor of that paper is fully aware of this fact:

"Mr. Greeley's election or defeat depends on his receiving the support of that part of the Democratic Party which would never have proposed him as a Democratic candidate. Organized bolt there will be none; but if hundreds of thousands of dissatisfied Democrats should stay away from the polls, the election of Gen. Grant would be a foregone certainty. The critical point of the canvass lies in the ability of the Democratic Party to bring all its voters to the polls in support of Mr. Greeley. If the Democrats who dislike such a candidate should sullkily say to home the re-election of Gen. Grant is as certain as anything in the future can be, the real stage of the Presidential election is the possibility of inducing the Anti-Greeley Democrats that he is a better candidate than Grant."

But unfortunately for Mr. Greeley, the more prominent men of the old wing of the party are men of sagacity and firmness, who honestly believe that the election of Greeley would be a greater calamity to the country than the re-election of Grant would be, while it would furthermore be the utter annihilation of the Democratic Party. And these men can and will give reasons for this belief, which no sophistry can answer, and which are proof to a prejudice can imitate. And they are men of such character that no abuse can intimidate them, nor can flattery or persuasion soften their opposition. The World is evidently haunted with this conviction, even while trying to flatter itself that it is possible to rope them in.

While the World admits that there is danger that if we wing of the Democratic Party will utterly refuse to support Mr. Greeley, it is of the opinion that "organized bolt there will be none." Now there will be no "bolt," except the shameful bolt which the Baltimore Convention made away from the party and its principles. But there will be a considerable organized opposition to Mr. Greeley by the true old line Democrats, who will consider the 1st of September is greater numbers than the Democracy defying Convention at Baltimore counted. The Greeley Convention numbered less than 800, but the Convention of the true Democracy will number more than 100 times more, not of hard-money-bloated, money-grubbing, carpet-baggers, bummers, speculators, and politicians who have fattened all the offices under Greeley, but of honest men—men of high purpose, substantial means and determined will. If the World will suspend its opinion on this matter until after the 1st of September, it will have occasion to change its mind altogether. The Democratic flag thrown down as Baltimore will be taken up and borne on high by the only Democratic Party now existing in this country. This is as sure to come to pass as the month of September is to come up the revolving course of the clock.

OLD-LINE DEMOCRAT.

NEW-YORK, Friday, July 12, 1872.

The Colored Vote.

A correspondent of the Evening Post gives in a few words a satisfactory explanation of one of the causes of the admitted fact that few, if any, of the colored voters will support Greeley, saying that they know well that they would have been condemned to perpetual servitude had Greeley's advice been followed in 1861, when he said the Southern States ought to be permitted to withdraw quietly from the Union, and that their right to do so was as good as the Colonies had to do so a century before from Great Britain. The correspondent says: "Slum on from all interference from the North, the African trade would have been adopted, probably, and more galling chains imposed. Sumner went further, and on the same principle and revolutionary example justified rising against their masters. Gen. Grant, who rescued the Union and gave liberty to the enslaved at the risk of his life, and the brave men with him, must be thrust aside to make way for a tanner who has joined the greatest enemies of the colored race."

PRICE TWO CENTS.

[illegible] Kingsley, [illegible] Porter, of Northampton; Chief Justice Cushing, Dr. H. Grant, of Harvard; Rev. Dr. Ide, Charles Hallock, Rev. Dr. Cheever, Rev. Dr. Ward, Rev. Dr. White, Canton Centre, Conn. The Alumni dinner was held in the hall under College Hall, known as Agricultural Hall, soon after 1 o'clock. Dr. Stearns sat at the head of the table, with Gov. Washburn and Hon. Edward Dickinson on either side of him. The dinner speeches were brief, no speeches being made. President Stearns made the usual announcement as to the financial condition of the College, and the bequests to the College during the year. After singing "Let Children Hear the Mighty Deeds" and prayer, the company broke up, and the exercises of Commencement week were at an end.

THE COLLEGE REGATTA.

The crews leave for Springfield at once, the Freesmen today, and the University tomorrow. The University crew is made up as follows: Walter Negley, '72, Hagerstown, Md., stroke; Arthur J. Benedict, '73, Bethel, Conn.; F. M. Whiting, Peabody; Geo. M. Brewer, Southboro; H. F. Brown, Pittsburg; F. Leverett Bradley, Jr., Methuen, now and Cambridge. They will pull in a new boat, built by Blakey, of Cambridge. The Freesman crew are O. A. Benton, Cleveland, Ohio, stroke, and Captain; M. F. Lewis, Pembroke, N. S.; C. F. Little, South Weymouth; W. Seville, Geneva, N. Y.; Daniel Kent, Lebanon; Chas. Arnold, Bath, N. Y. now and Cambridge. Concerning the crews the Amherst Student says:

"Training as good as last year, we think the whole College. Our Faculty have done just as much to put the crews in the matter as any one of the College officers. But for aid and encouragement which they have given us fellows, we certainly would not have had a crew at all. Some of whose feeling would have languished had year as in the past. We have heard considerable dissatisfaction, but it has subsided by the course our Professors have taken, we think, and it has done more good to the institution than it has done harm. It is generally conceded to be a good thing as beneficial to the institution as it is agreeable to crewmen and graduates. It is worth much to have a crew, and we believe it will yearly come to belong to one where Faculty and students feel they have a common interest in every effort for alma Mater."

DEATHS DURING THE YEAR.

The following is the obituary record, for the year ending July 11, 1872, as published in the Student of yesterday:

1820. Rev. Seth Marsh, died at Portland, Minn., Jan. 18, 1872, aged 76.

1822. Rev. Joel Campbell, died at Lafayette, N. J., May 14, 1872, aged 75.

1827. Rev. Charles G. Clark, died at Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 2, 1871, aged 72.

1826. Rev. Edward Jones, of the Sierra Leone Mission, died at Chatham, County of Kent, England, in 1866.

1829. George W. Brown, died in 1871. He resided in Columbus, S. C.

1829. Rev. Jas. E. Warner, died in a fit, at New-York, March 8, 1864, aged 54.

1831. Rev. Jesse L. Frazy, died in Shepardstown, Va., of pneumonia, Feb. 20, 1869, aged 56.

1831. John Orsam, of Virginia, died in 1871.

1831. Andrew Denny, M. D., died in Jackson, Ala., of disease of the spine, June 8, 1869, aged 57.

1834. Judge Stephen W. Bilinger, died of erysipelas, near Canandaigua, N. Y., April 19, 1870, aged 56.

1835. John B. Greenough, died in Boscawen, N. H., Jan. 17, 1868, aged 48.

1835. George W. Beers, committed suicide in California, in 1863, at the age of 44.

1839. Rev. George K. Perkins, died May 25, 1872, at Pickwayville, Perry County, Ill., aged 59.

1843. Henry R. Rest, Esq., died in Baltimore, Md., Jan. 11, 1870, aged 50.

1839. Col. John P. Sanderson, of Jacksonville, Fla., who was prominent on the Confederate side during the war, died of heart disease, in New-York, June 28, 1871, aged 57.

1852. Benjamin E. Thurston, died of chronic diarrhea, in Delavan, Ill., June 4.

TOWN PUMPS.

A Dangerous Water Supply—How Typhoid Fever and Cholera are Disseminated—A Hint for the Health Officers.

There are still remaining in different parts of the City a few of the old wells and pumps from which, before the introduction of Croton, the inhabitants obtained a large portion of their water supply. The water from these sources is generally soft, pleasant to the taste, and cooler than Croton from the pipes, and consequently during the warm weather is much sought after. At some of these pumps, particularly at one in Hudson-street, near Jay, a constant stream of thirsty citizens could have been seen during the late heated term, drinking the water in large quantities, and with evident pleasure. There can be no doubt that this indulgence is attended with great danger, from the fact that the wells, situated in the midst of the most populous portions of the City, are certain to have the water made impure by the drainage from soil charged with decomposed animal substances and sewage. The experience of this and other cities, which have been repeatedly visited by deadly epidemics, has established the fact that impure water taken from favorite pumps has been largely instrumental in spreading disease. Well-authenticated facts are on record showing that water also aids in disseminating two of the most fatal diseases which affect the human race, viz., typhoid fever and cholera. Prof. Chandler, of Columbia College, who is undoubtedly one of the best authorities in this country on the subject of drinking water, has repeatedly called attention to the dangers attending the use of impure water.

The subject deserves especial attention at this unusually sickly season, and while there exists no reason for the use of bad water, the supply of Croton being both abundant and thoroughly pure. The impurities existing in wells are more dangerous from the fact that they do not make themselves apparent to the taste, but on the contrary, the waters are frequently considered unusually fine in flavor, and are consequently sought after from a distance. Prof. Chandler asserts that sudden outbreaks of disease are sometimes traced to a marked change in an irruption of sewage into wells, either from a break in the sewer or cess-pool, or from some peculiarity of the season. Such contamination of the water is not indicated by any perceptible change in its appearance. The filtered sewage, clear and transparent, carries with it the germs of the disease. At Newburgh, Michigan, where one out of 121 of the inmates were affected with typhoid fever, it was found upon investigation that the well was polluted by sewage, and the disease disappeared as soon as the proper repairs were made. A similar instance occurred in a fashionable seminary for young ladies' boarders, in Springfield, Massachusetts. At Mariner's Harbor, on Staten Island, in 1866, the inmates of a small block of houses were attacked by typhoid fever, and several deaths occurred. An investigation disclosed that a neighbor, through whose land the under-ground drain passed, had closed the drain, thus sending its contents back upon the premises, and contaminating the well, and thus causing the fatal epidemic.

During the last century, before the introduction of waters at Croton water, the City was visited every few years by deadly epidemics which are now believed to have been invited by the manner in which the water supply was then obtained. This agency is particularly instrumental in causing the spread of cholera, as has been frequently demonstrated. Some of the historical instances given in proof of this fact are very interesting as well as instructive. At Exeter, England, in 1866, 1866 death occurred from cholera. A purer supply of water was then obtained from a point two miles further up the river, above the locality where the sewage of the city was emptied. The cholera made its appearance again in 1869, but only forty-four cases occurred, and during the cholera season of 1866 there were nearly 1,000 cases.

Perhaps the most striking proof of the theory occurred in London during the epidemic of 1848-9. The famous Broad-street pump supplied water to one of the most fashionable quarters of the West End. In one week it was estimated, on the best authority, that that pump alone took 500 victims by the dreadful disease. The wealthy people of the West End removed to Brompton, a fashionable resort about five miles up the Thames, but the deadly scourge soon made its appearance among them. An investigation by the health authorities resulted in the discovery that the people had been in the habit of sending to the Broad-street pump for tea-water, and had thus brought the cholera to the place. A curious additional case was that of an old gardener, who had moved to Hampstead, three miles from the pump, but who had her maid daily for a bottle of the highly-prized tea-water. The mistress and her maid were the only persons at Hampstead who were attacked by the disease.

A few years ago there was an outbreak of cholera in a country village west of Central Park, which was clearly traced to the impurity of the water in the only well in the village. An analysis made at the time by Prof. Chandler showed the impurities in one gallon of water to be 45.5, while in the same amount of Croton they were only 4.45.

At the corner of Van Brunt-street, in the Twelfth Ward of Brooklyn, there is a famous pump, from which a large number of families formerly obtained their supply. In the year 1866 cholera broke out in a number of these families; but, fortunately, the source of the disease was suspected, and further contagion prevented by the prompt action of the Health Officer in removing the pump-handle.

These are only a few of the instances which might be cited in proof of the fact that wells situated in the centres of cities, or in any place where they can become the receptacles of impure drainage, are dangerous to the health of the community. While no harm may have resulted from the use of the pumps in this City during the past few weeks, there can be no doubt that if the cholera should manifest its appearance here, as is not improbable, the continued use of the water could hardly fail to spread the disease. Under such circumstances the subject becomes one which deserves the attention of the Health Officers. A distinguished authority says: "During the ten years from 1848 to 1858, there were 21,600 deaths from cholera in England and Wales, and 180,000 deaths from typhoid fever. There is every reason to believe that at least three-fourths of these deaths might have been prevented had proper attention been paid to the purity of the water supply."

CUBA.

Valmaseda's Resignation—The Course of the New Incumbent—The Cubans Encouraged—War News and General Gossip.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Saturday, July 6, 1872.

The resignation of Gen. Valmaseda, and the probable appointment of Gen. Condova as Captain-General, have produced something more than a nine days' wonder, as the consequences of this change will be more than a mere substitution of one man in place of another. There is no doubt that Gen. Cordova or any other General who may come here will continue the policy pursued hitherto, in respect of the suppression of the revolution, and although Cordova belongs to the so-called liberal and radical party in Spain, on his arrival here he would be compelled to take things as he finds them and pursue the same course as his predecessors, unless he should feel inclined to share the fate of Gen. Dulce. The fact cannot be doubted that, at present, and while the common danger lasts, the Spaniards in Cuba, and the plantation and mere owning Cubans, will put down any attempt to introduce Spanish or any other politics; but, under the shadow of national integrity and honor, Spain, they will be prepared to make all the sugar they can, sell it at the best prices obtainable, and keep up slavery. Only one cloud darkens the heaven of the Spanish population, and that is the idea of a possible war with the United States. The insurgent question troubles them but little. As long as the insurrection does not spread to the west of the Central Department nobody seems to care about it. The usual scenes of a Captain-General's departure are already observable at the palace. The number of Valmaseda's friends and admirers is growing smaller, and the reports about certain officials having become rich by accepting bribes are common about the streets. The difference between the United States and Cuba in this respect is, that while in the former country men are attacked while in office, here they are only spoken about when among the dead.

WAR NEWS.

About three weeks ago a letter from President Cespedes to Gen. Modesto Diaz was intercepted by a Spanish column. Cespedes ordered Diaz to assemble his forces to join Magin Gomez and some other leaders, and to be prepared to make a combined attack somewhere in the neighborhood of Holguin. The Spanish authorities, believing that this assembling of the insurgent forces was for the purpose of protecting the intended landing of the Fannie, simply cautioned their commanders in that department. On the 7th ult., Col. Aguilar, of the Regiment España, was conveying eighty-seven sick and wounded soldiers to Holguin from Barajagua, his force consisting of its men in addition to the wounded. When between the settlement of Tacamara and Holguin he was suddenly attacked by the Cuban forces, Cespedes commanding in person, according to a report, and the numbers of the latter being over five to one, and the troops embarrassed by the large number of wounded in their charge, the troops were soon routed, the Colonel was severely wounded, and the Cubans remained masters of the field. This is the most successful attack made by the Cubans since the breaking out of the war, several soldiers who managed to reach Holguin reporting that between killed and wounded they lost over 100 men during the fight, the rest taking to the woods, pursued by the enemy. This is the Spanish report, as received from the escaped soldiers.

REPENTANT REBELS.

The stereotyped proclamation, which all the renegades are in the habit of issuing to their countrymen, has just made its appearance, signed by the former Cuban and present Spanish patriot, Pepillo Gonsales, his brother Pablo, the brothers Porfirio Toño and Ignacio Camejo. The phrases are the same as those employed by others who became convinced of the error of their ways by Spanish gold or good offers of future advancement. A few thousand dollars, judiciously spent on the heroes of the Manuel Aravamonte style, will do much more than the proclamations of the individuals themselves.

MISCELLANEOUS GOSSIP.

Mr. Pedro Ricart, the manager of the branch of the Havana Spanish Bank, at Matanzas, has arrived at Santiago de Cuba, for the purpose of starting a branch establishment there, but neither the merchants nor the planters are inclined to take any stock. The Bank will nevertheless be established, as Havana will furnish the necessary funds. A jilted lover, in Villa Clara, killed a young girl, aged fifteen years, about an hour previous to the ceremony intended to make her the wife of another. Several assassinations have lately occurred, but Spanish journals fail to mention names, and bring out interesting particulars. Large numbers of soldiers, who have served their time are returning to Spain; the last mail steamer took 619, and about 6,000 more are waiting to go. Gov. Zabala has recovered from his attack of vomito and is convalescent. Don Montano, of the regular army, a fine gentleman and talented journalist, has been put under arrest for writing the truth to the Minister of War, in Madrid, about the doings of the General Staff officers. The Junta de Colonistas is quietly preparing the necessary proofs to "play the game" with certain henchmen-governors and employes of the police, known to have issued illegal documents to runaway Chinamen; the general impression is that the Junta will only succeed in effecting the removal of the employes.

QUASIMODO.

Commencement Exercises of the Lawrenceville, N. J., High School.

The Classical Commercial High School of Lawrenceville, N. J., held its sixty-second annual commencement on the 11th of July, (Thursday last.) This is one of the oldest institutions of the kind in the country. It has had very marked success from its foundation, sixty-two years ago. The exercises passed off to the credit of all concerned. The day was exceedingly in all respects. Among the distinguished persons present were Rev. A. T. McGill, of the Princeton Theological Seminary; Rev. Dr. Campbell, of New-York; Rev. Dr. Hamite Masses, of West Africa; Gen. Karge, of Princeton College, and others.

Mysterious Disappearance.

Col. George Langster, aged forty-five, dark complexioned, black mustache and goatee, left his residence, No. 184 Rodney-street, Williamsburg, on the morning of the 3d inst., apparently to make a visit to New-York on private business. He called upon a friend in this City about noon and left soon after, since which time no trace of Mr. Langster has been obtained. The family are in great distress at his unaccountable disappearance, and request that any one who can give further information relative to him will at once communicate it at the above address.

Funeral of the Murdered Policeman.

The funeral of Patrolman John Donohue, of the Fifth Precinct, Brooklyn, E. D., who was murdered by the "Battle-row gang," took place yesterday morning from the Church of Sts. Peter and Paul, Second-street, Williamsburg, Rev. Father Malone officiating. The funeral was very largely attended, the cortege consisting of some seventy or more carriages, and a body of about 300 policemen. The Mayor and members of the Board of Aldermen attended. A platoon of officers from Donohue's precinct acted as pall-bearers. The beautiful grave interred at Calvary Cemetery.

A MORMON LADY.

I have remarkable luck in traveling acquaintances. The night after the boat-race in which we were so badly beaten by those brawny, brutal Englishmen, all beef and beer, I went sadly to the Paddington Station, to fly up the Thames, and across Avon and Severn, to the pure air of the hills. In a corner of the compartment of the railway carriage where I was settling myself for the trip was a lady, probably past thirty years of age, bright, handsome, nicely and tastefully dressed in velvet and lace, with pretty bracelets, rich jewelry—altogether a tasteful and attractive person; not English, I thought; probably French; possibly American. I asked the first convenient question—should I open the window? Not French, certainly, and the high, tone of her voice, a trifle of the nasal and a bit of a drawl—I could not be mistaken—small hands, small feet, the style of her dress—she must be an American. She was. Only a few months in England; came at the time in London; longed to see English scenery; going to visit a dear friend of her mother's in the west of England, and our ways would lie together for a hundred miles.

What a home feeling comes over me after all these years of absence. When I meet a countryman of mine, or still more, perhaps, fair country-woman, I do not stand on ceremony. I take it for granted that we ought to know each other, and that he or she will be as glad to talk with me as I with them. The English are said to carefully avoid each other when they meet on the Continent. They may have reason; but farther of they also fraternize.

My lady, I learned in less than half an hour, was not only an American, but a Massachusetts Yankee. When she was a little child her mother emigrated to the West.

"I have been West," said I; "how far West?"

"Very far. I have been to San Francisco," said she, "but my home was in Utah."

"Utah! Why—then you have been to Salt Lake City?"

"Lived there nearly all my life."

"Among the Mormons?"

"Naturally.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

[illegible]

MONDAY, July 15—A. M.

The weekly averages of the Associated Banks, Local and National, reporting through the Clearing-house for the week ending Saturday last, July 13, compare as follows with the previous week, and also with the corresponding week last year. To which we add the Gold and Currency balance in the New-York Office of the United States Treasury at these dates respectively:

Increase in Loans	$294,000
Decrease in Specie	372,100
Increase in Legal-Tenders	232,100
Increase in other Lawful Money	8,725,100
Decrease in Circulation	42,600
Decrease in Deposits	2,440,700
Decrease in Reserve	2,132,100

	July 13, '72.	July 6, '72.	July 15, '71.
National Gold	$72,121,000	$71,791,000	$71,792,000
Less Capital	12,500,000	12,500,000	12,500,000
Total	$59,621,000	$57,154,000	$57,144,000
Loans	390,808,000	390,561,000	386,097,000
Gold and Gold Notes	19,959,000	22,700,000	22,500,000
Other Lawful Tenders	30,674,000	32,000,000	32,000,000
Deposits	287,552,000	289,774,000	289,500,000
Circulation	30,880,000	27,300,000	27,300,000
In Sub-Treasury	42,000,000	43,000,000	47,000,000

The Bank return published this morning exhibits the relative strength of the movement in respect to the Lawful Money held, as against the Circulation and Deposits, to which we add the position of the movement the week before, and also of the movement of the corresponding week last year:

	July 6, '72.	July 13, '72.	July 15, '71.
Deposits	$289,774,000	$287,552,300	$289,500,000
Circulation	27,400,000	30,880,000	30,281,000
Total	$289,352,000	$272,074,000	$237,914,000
Required 25 ⅌ ct.	$67,338,000	$68,018,000	$71,479,000
Actual basis	81,294,100	81,004,100	80,888,100
Excess	$13,972,275	$13,020,500	$10,864,925
Rate of money	4@6 ⅌ ct.	4@6 ⅌ ct.	3@6 ⅌ ct.

The Bank return is fairly steadily in respect to Gold and Greenbacks, while the general line of Deposits is up nearly four millions of dollars on the July collection of Dividends to the credit of private Depositors and of the Country Banks. Money has become nearly as cheap as last July, when the Deposits were $12,000,000 higher, and Gold and Greenbacks $9,000,000 more than at present. The present proportion of Gold held in Bank is better than last season, notwithstanding a rather increased Export demand for Gold. During the week past the Sub-Treasury Office paid out $3,800,000 for Gold Interest, and sold on Thursday for account of the Sinking Fund $1,000,000. The amount of American Gold Coin taken for Europe, and chiefly supplied from these disbursements of the Treasury, was $4,920,000. In other Specie the shipments were $603,534, making $4,883,534, as follows:

July 8—Steamer America, Southampton—
Silver bullion	$1,820
American gold coin	500,000
July 9—Steamer Cuba, Liverpool—
Silver bars	241,049
American gold coin	200,000
July 11—Steamer Siberia, Hamburg—
Base bullion	68,980
July 11—Steamer Scotia, Liverpool—
Gold bars	30,000
Silver bars	46,000
American gold coin	1,000,000
July 11—Steamer Type, Aspinwall—
American silver coin	2,680
July 15—Steamer Batavia, Liverpool—
Silver bars	259,500
July 12—Schooner Storm King, Maracaibo—
American gold coin	30,000
July 13—Steamer City of Brooklyn, Liverpool—
American gold coin	1,200,000
Silver bars	9,500
July 13—Steamer Bremen, Bremen—
Foreign silver coin	4,000
July 13—Steamer Atlantic, Liverpool—
American gold coin	1,050,000
Total for week	$4,822,534

The Export demand for Gold at the close of the week caused the price to close firm on the sales of Saturday at 114¾@114⅞ ⅌ cent. The rates of Exchange on London are at the Gold shipping points, but with a disposition on the part of some of the Bankers to draw freely on this basis—109⅞@109⅞, 60 days, and 110⅛@110⅛ ⅌ cent. short sight and sight Bills.

We alluded in our last weekly review to the probability that a further negotiation of the new 5 ⅌ cent. Loan of the United States might soon be practicable. The Secretary of the Treasury has at command $300,000,000 of this Loan, and the report comes from Washington that Messrs. Jay Cooke & Co., whose New-York partner, Mr. H. T. Fahnestock, of this City, goes to London on the Scotia on Wednesday next, are now in consultation with Mr. Boutwell on the subject.

The Import Entries at New-York, embracing foreign Dry Goods and General Merchandise, for the week past, were $6,550,406, as against $6,726,995 for the corresponding week last year. The exports of Domestic Produce, other than Gold and Silver, were $3,965,813 against $4,903,238 same week in 1871. The export of Gold and Silver, $4,883,534 against $1,903,814 same week in 1871. The Customs in Gold paid into the New-York Office of the United States Treasury for the week were $1,622,356. The receipts of Cotton, coastwise and by rail, 4,963 bales.

As the Fiscal Year 1872 closed with the 30th June ult., we now resume our weekly comparative summary of the Export, Import and Treasury movements at this port, as for the Calendar Year.

The Gold values of the Import Entries of Foreign Merchandise at New-York, exclusive of Foreign Specie, since Jan. 1, 1872, are as follows, the figures being official to June 1, and since semi-official from the Custom-House:

January	$25,527,174	May	$25,488,217
February	26,036,456	June*	25,455,700
March	28,927,070	July*	6,095,329
April	28,490,310	July 12*	6,595,456
Total since Jan. 1			$242,559,756
Same time last year			216,705,455
Increase since last year			$25,854,291

*Unofficial.

The Currency value of Exports of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods, including Foreign Goods re-exported from New-York since Jan. 1, is as follows:

January	$12,961,004	May	$16,880,947
February	17,913,068	June	18,110,462
March	16,559,019	July 1	4,472,657
April	16,704,703	July 12	3,965,813
Total since Jan. 1			$114,062,668
Same time last year			121,782,444
Decrease since Jan. 1			$6,707,776

*Unofficial.

The following are the Customs receipts of Gold, and the interest paid on the Public Debt in Gold, at the New-York Office of the United States Treasury since Jan. 1, 1872:

Notice.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot under any circumstances return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

To Advertisers.

☞ For the accommodation of up-town residents, advertisements for insertion in the TIMES will be received at No. 84 West 32d-st., junction of Broadway and 6th-av.; No. 308 West 23d-st., opposite Grand Opera-house, and No. 1,241 Broadway, between 30th and 31st sts., at same rates as are charged at office of publication.

☞ The NEW-YORK TIMES has opened a branch office in Brooklyn at No. 111 Fulton st., junction of Fulton and Main, where advertisements will be received until 5 P. M.

☞ Throughout the Presidential canvass, we shall publish fuller reports of meetings and conventions in each State than any other New-York journal. Very full dispatches will be forwarded by telegraph, supplemented by careful letters. Our desire is to place before the public the latest and most trustworthy information, and we have made ample arrangements for that purpose.

It is very common among the Democratic papers (old and new) to represent Gen. GRANT as a man of "no ideas." Any one who will take the trouble to read the extracts from his correspondence, reports, and messages published in another column, can easily decide whether there is any basis for this persistent statement. Gen. GRANT'S ideas are very clearly defined on the nature of the late rebellion, on the principles of our free institutions, on the duties of his official position, and on the work he wishes to accomplish for his country. There is none of GREELEY'S "philosophy," or BROWN'S "statesmanship" about them, but they are the simple ideas of honesty and common sense, and in his whole public career he has been true to them. Is there any doubt that they are the living ideas needed by the people at this time?

It will be observed that a fair amount of progress has been made by the members of our staff intrusted with the task of organizing a system of relief for the poor children of the City who are stricken with sickness. There are more than enough of genuine cases of distress among this class to employ all the funds at our disposal. It is, however, obviously necessary that precautions should be taken to see that relief is only administered in cases of real necessity, and that it should not be diverted from the little ones for whom it is intended. We believe we have secured both these requisites in the organization which has so far been made, and they will be kept steadily in view in the further arrangements which are still to be perfected.

Can the Tribune give us the details of Mr. GREELEY'S persistent applications to the Administration for an office for one CAMP, including his begging for the influence of a Cabinet officer to this end, because he had lost this CAMP money, and could never get it back unless CAMP got an office? And while the Tribune is at this business, it may as well tell us what other of his debts Mr. GREELEY endeavored to collect, by quartering his debtor upon the people of the United States. There is an excellent opportunity, in the gathering of these facts from the records of the Departments at Washington, to illustrate the Fenton system of civil service reform; but we fear the Tribune will neglect it, and leave us to guess what sort of people Mr. GREELEY would appoint to office, by the simple expedient of showing who he has heretofore sought to have appointed. Remembering how many impecunious individuals have practiced upon the credulity of the Sage, and that he manifestly supposes the fact of anybody owing him money constitutes a valid claim for public employment, we are not surprised that the Tribune has made haste to advise every one holding office to get ready to clear out. This course would hardly be consistent with the Cincinnati platform, but it would be very conducive to the interests of the Tammany candidate, which is much more to the purpose.

Probably no public man ever assigned quite so novel a reason for his political preferences as Mr. SUMNER has given for his "honoring" the Democratic candidate. We have known for some time that Mr. SUMNER'S mind was operated on by very recondite influences. Did not the fact that Gen. GRANT'S views on the civil service were not those of TANCREDE, and were allowed to differ from those of SAINT LOUIS, of France, compel Mr. SUMNER to withhold from the President his august confidence? But this is a mere common-place compared to the pregnant fact which forces Mr. SUMNER to "honor" Mr. GREELEY. "We were born," says the Senator, "in the same year! I honor him very much." We confess that this is a statement of the case to which really nothing can be replied. It is, in its way, absolutely unapproachable.

Senator BAYARD, of Delaware, has pocketed the insults with which he was hooted into silence at the Baltimore Convention, and declared reluctantly for GREELEY, the Democratic candidate. His main reason for doing so is, that he desires to reverse the policy of Gen. GRANT in upholding the State Governments of the South. He expects GREELEY would do this. Are the people ready to have it done? The State Governments of the South are the fruit of universal suffrage. Gen. GRANT has sustained them only against Ku-Klux conspiracies. Do the people wish any State Governments surrendered to those?

We conclude that the World considers that the Democracy has got "a hook in the nose" of its candidate. It speaks of "the Democratic Cabinet which Mr. GREELEY will be constrained to appoint." This shows what a vote for the Baltimore candidate must aid in accomplishing.

A Candidate's Confession.

Mr. B. GRATZ BROWN, in the course of an inflated speech at New-Haven, the other day, was interrupted by some of his audience with applause for the Philadelphia candidates, whereupon, in a burst of candor, he cried out, "I am glad to see there are a few who are innocent enough to think that there is still a Republican Party."

Mr. BROWN was the chief manipulator of the movement in Missouri which divided the Republican Party there, and sent the author of the Brodhead letter to the United States Senate. He flatters himself that that movement destroyed the Republican Party in the State, and he has repeatedly boasted of the achievement. Lately Mr. BROWN has been playing a similar game in national politics. He goes about declaring that the party is dead in the nation, and he hopes to bring in an Administration in sympathy with FRANK BLAIR, whom the Missouri plot carried into the Senate.

When November comes this pot-valiant orator may be undeceived as to the effectiveness of his political treachery. Already in Missouri, the majority of the prominent men who acted against the regular organization of the Republican Party on the question of disfranchisement, have returned to their former positions, and are heartily in favor of GRANT and WILSON, as representing the safe and substantial liberal sentiment of the country. Most of this class have abandoned the Brown clique in their State, because they have discovered that it was engaged in a conspiracy with the Democratic leaders for common personal advancement. Others have abandoned it because the single issue of enfranchisement is settled, and on all other issues they are Republicans.

BROWN will find that a similar state of things exists in the Republican Party of the nation. If any were at one time inclined to sustain independent action, in order to secure amnesty or revenue reform, they now see that the Republican Party, on these questions is fully up to the general sentiment of the people. It has moreover attested the sincerity of its feeling on these subjects by decisive action. But the wretched faction originated by BROWN not only has no proof of sincerity to give, but has given the most convincing evidence of cowardice and duplicity. Is it by this faction that the Republican Party can be surrendered into the hands of its enemies? Is it for men like this vain-glorious speech-maker that the nation is ready to exchange the representative men of the Republican Party?

Mr. BROWN will find, when it comes to the test, that it is one thing to sell a great national party, but an entirely different thing to deliver it. Adventitious circumstances enabled him to succeed in his first venture, but when he congratulates himself that he was able to betray the Republican Party of the whole United States for a price, he will find that he is mistaken. The people are not ready, at this critical juncture to give up the Republican Party, or the honest and capable Administration which has honorably and faithfully represented that party. The work which Republicans commenced, they desire that Republicans shall complete. They perceive that, against a most unscrupulous and obstinate opposition, the Republican Party has brought freedom, equality, and peace to the lately rebellious States. They see those who have persistently resisted this consummation, organized under the lead of a force of renegade Republicans to make one last desperate effort; and they are determined that it shall fail. Mr. BROWN declares that he is willing to "go to the last ditch" with Mr. GREELEY. It is plain, from all indications, that the Republican Party, which he persuades himself is dead, is ready to give him the opportunity.

The Judiciary Night.

Mr. GREELEY'S organ has the blindness to repeat its statement that the TIMES never attacked the corrupt Judges until it led the way! In ascertaining the truth in regard to this matter, we are furnished by the Tribune itself with the exact date at which its own labors began. That paper says: "The Tribune published its charges of malfeasance against these Judges as early as Nov. 15, 1871." It only remains to inquire whether any similar work had been done by the TIMES previous to Nov. 15, 1871; if so, what was the nature of that work, and what was the degree of its effectiveness.

On these points the testimony is abundant. It consists in the contents of our own editorials, and the conversations and allusions of Judge GEORGE G. BARNARD, the most conspicuous and audacious of the Ring Judges. Our columns show that in the year 1868, three years before the Tribune professes to have entered the fight, our editorials on the Erie suits made it perfectly plain to the public that the Judiciary of this City were in part corrupt, and that the corruption of these Judges was a part of the corruption of the Democratic Ring, which, at that time, was stretching out its hands to lay hold of every Department of our State and City Government—just as now, by aid of the Tribune, it is seeking to lay hold on the powers of the National Government.

Will the Tribune pretend that an exposure of this kind was of no effect? That view of the case was not shared by Judge BARNARD himself.

In a charge to the Grand Jury made in November, 1868, he confessed that the assaults of the TIMES had "impaired his usefulness," or, in other words, had caused him to feel his hold loosening on the powers he had abused. He declared that he must stop "this thing," and he charged the Grand Jury to bring in an indictment against the editor of this paper.

The record shows that neither the threat nor its execution sufficed to protect Judge BARNARD from the continued exposures of this paper. On the morning after the Judge charged the jury to indict the editor of the TIMES, the jury was urged to comply with the charge. It did so, and on the 20th of November, 1868, the fact of the indictment was announced. The same day the paper offered to substantiate its charges against the Judge. It said:

"We shall undertake to prove to the satisfaction of a jury and the public the substantial truth of everything we have said concerning Judge Barnard's action in the Erie litigation, and to show also that we have said it from no motives of private malice or resentment, but in what we regard as the public interest, and with the sole object of promoting the public good. We assumed this responsibility when we made the statements of which Judge Barnard complains; and we stand ready to meet it. * * *

In anything we have said of Judge BARNARD we are not conscious of having violated any of these restrictions, (on the true liberty of the Press.) We believe it is true, and we know it has been dictated by no improper motive. We stand by the whole of it, and are ready to maintain its truth and its justice in any Court and before any tribunal.

We presume it will devolve upon the District-Attorney to prosecute this indictment, if one has been found. We hope he will do so without delay, and not let the labors of the pending election interfere in any way with the faithful discharge of his duty."

Had this challenge been accepted, BARNARD would before now have been driven from the Bench. While it was yet uncertain what his course would be, the paper continued with the utmost explicitness its exposure of both BARNARD and CARDOZO, and especially of their infamous course in the Erie cases. The indictment for libel never was prosecuted. The Ring resorted to other and worse measures to silence the paper without success, and on the other hand the paper turned its attention to enlisting the Bar in the struggle to overthrow the corrupt Judges. Of the nature, extent, and effect of its efforts in this direction we shall speak on another occasion. Enough has been said today to show the utter falsity of the Tribune's allegation that this paper only entered the contest with judicial corruption when it was seen to be sure of success. We began that contest years before the time assigned by the Tribune as the date of its own enlistment. We have steadily pursued it as a part of our general campaign against corruption, of which last year's fight against Tammany was another part. The closing operations of that war will include the exposure and defeat of the allied forces of GREELEY and Tammany in the Presidential field. Before November is over, we shall convince the Greeley organ that the new Ring is as powerless as the old one against the sense and virtue of the people and a really independent Press.

New Lights on City Reform.

The New-York Herald made the remarkable announcement yesterday that "the next Mayor of New-York should be a man with enterprise, spirit, boldness and honesty enough to foster all works of public improvement, regardless of their legitimate cost."

The Herald is of course quite at liberty to sketch its ideal Mayor, and considering that it has, hitherto, found A. OAKEY HALL a perfectly satisfactory Chief Magistrate for the City, it is hardly to be wondered at if it demands in his successor the same noble scorn of getting a dollar's worth of work for every dollar of expenditure. On its own principles the Herald's requisites for the Mayoralty are precisely what might have been expected from such a source, save that it is difficult to see what use there was for mentioning the qualification of even so little honesty in this connection at all. But the journal which knows so much about the sources of the Nile and so little about the affairs of New-York, has another valuable suggestion to offer to the tax-payers of the City. There is an urgent necessity, it appears, for driving out "parsimony and false economy from the administration of our affairs." This is truly remarkable. The result of all the inquiries which we have made into this matter has been to convince us, that the expenses of the City and County Government are, this year, two millions in excess of what they ought to be. We are paying over sixteen millions and a quarter for the working expenses of the various Departments of our local Government. Let us have a clean sweep of the remnants of Tammany rule left us by the last Legislature, and we should certainly expect to see a Reform Administration carry on our City and County business for fourteen millions a year.

It is, therefore, not very easy to imagine in what Department the Herald has discovered "parsimony and false economy." It would be quite a refreshing change to have some well-authenticated samples produced of this kind of thing. Though the Herald suppressed our proofs against those whom it now calls "the rogues who misappropriate and steal the public moneys," we shall sincerely give due prominence to the narrative of certain "niggardly" transactions, darkly alluded to, when it is published. We feel sure that the Herald is altogether too "independent" to regard the cutting down of its own little bill for advertising as the product of "a niggardly desire to appear (sic) to save a few dollars." Perhaps, however, one of the public works which require to be fostered "regardless of their legitimate cost," is a return to the system of profuse advertising, under which the Herald and Telegram got $123,000 of public money in some two years and a half. With due respect to the ideal Mayor, whose leading traits have been so satisfactorily sketched, we submit that the tax-payers have had quite enough of this style of public administration. It is, perhaps, as well that the Herald has, thus early, intimated the nature of its preferences. Nobody ever suspected it of having much regard for public honesty. Its declaration of yesterday involves the seasonable reminder that its sympathies on this point, remain unchanged.

The Perils of the Sea-side.

Every year the visitors at our various seaside resorts are shocked by one or more drowning casualties. Already this year the sad catalogue has begun with the very sad occurrence which resulted in the death of Mr. POST. Before the end of the season it is to be feared, the list will be painfully augmented. In view of this, it behooves the proprietors of sea-side hotels to omit no possible precautions to guard against this ever present danger. Death, at any time, is painful, but death in the pursuit of pleasure, and in sight of agonized but helpless friends, is peculiarly shocking. One such accident is enough to shroud a place in gloom for the remainder of the season, and if the hotel keepers have no other motive to impel them to it, self-interest should urge that no foresight or care be omitted which can prevent the occurrence of such dreadful accidents.

At most of the sea-side watering places precautions of some such kind as we suggest are, we believe, in use. But these seldom go far enough. A rope provided for the benefit of timid bathers or inexperienced swimmers, as a rule, comprises the extent of these safeguards. These, however, are the very classes least liable to the danger sought to be averted. It is, on the contrary, the bold and skillful swimmer, like Mr. POST, who, by venturing too far, or from excessive exertion, fall victims to the dreaded undertow and are swept helplessly and hopelessly to sea. In every case while bathing is going on boats should be stationed off shore provided with ropes, life-buoys and other appliances for saving life, and manned by strong and expert swimmers. Perhaps something too might be devised in the way of a net, to let down and so catch a body sweeping out in the under-tow. The hours of bathing, moreover, should be carefully regulated, and none permitted to enter the water except at the prescribed times. On every dangerous beach there should be an organized patrol of experienced bathing-men, whose duty it should be to look after the safety of bathers, and to render assistance in case of accident. These persons should be conversant with the approved methods of treatment for the resuscitation of persons drowned, and short rules to the same effect might be posted up in the bath-houses. The more general use of the bath-machines common abroad would go some way to lessen the risk.

By systematic efforts like these, and by the exercise of ordinary prudence on the part of bathers, the danger could be greatly lessened if not entirely averted. In Europe such safeguards would be provided by public authority. Here it is not too much to ask them of the hotel-keepers, who thrive on the attractions of the sea, and who surely owe it to their patrons to diminish as far as possible its perils.

Chemical Works and Vegetation.

A number of experiments have lately been tried at and near Manchester, in England, with a view to determine the effect of gases and other emanations, from chemical works upon contiguous vegetation. The result has been to show that such gases are decidedly unfavorable to trees and shrubs, corroding and blighting them in a destructive manner, and it can hardly be doubted that the same causes must be more or less prejudicial to human health. This being the case, legislation should surely intervene, especially in densely peopled neighborhoods, to protect the common good; for, whatever the difficulties, and we doubt not there will be many, attending the consumption of the vapors and smokes of chemical works on the spot where they are evolved, exemption from those difficulties sought not to be enjoyed at the cost of a whole community.

It is worth while to name some of the manufactures the ill effects from which are reported so clearly proved. In this catalogue are enumerated, then, works where sulphuric acid, or oil of vitriol, is made from iron pyrites, soda-ash from sulphate of soda, tar and naphtha distilleries, copper-works where the ore is roasted with salt so as to expel the sulphur and arsenic in the copper, wire-works where hot wire is passed, to clean it, through muriatic acid prior to being galvanized, and generally the manufacture or use of the muriatic and sulphuric acids. So far, the investigation has been substantially limited to these branches, but it is thought that similar results will be traced to numerous other chemical operations that are conducted on any considerable scale, and the opinion of the Investigating Committee, which consists of men of conceded ability and public spirit is strongly expressed as regards the necessity of action on the part of Government to protect vegetation and the health of the people from this insidious and rapidly-spreading source of danger.

Manufactories naturally tend to increase amid dense populations, and hence the possible evils attending their establishment should be most carefully watched and measured. Among other cautions deducible from the Manchester report, is that of discouraging manufactories in the neighborhood of public parks—the finer sorts of trees and shrubs being peculiarly sensitive to the gaseous poisons. Works using chemicals should, in general, be excluded from great towns, and spots where many people are gathered close together. Of course there is a manifest difficulty and may even be serious hardship here; for, if a factory is set up in a wilderness, the population is likely, before very long, to thicken near it. Perhaps, however, since smoke can be consumed, like the drink some dealers are licensed to sell "on the premises," the noxious gases may be likewise provided for, and there is room for profitable patents here, which would have the further recommendation of being steadily operative for the health of society.

A Fellow Feeling.

KEEFE offered a fabulous reward for the discovery of a new pleasure, but the genius of Persian invention was not great enough to gratify him. Nowadays he would hardly have asked in vain. A dozen years ago society found itself in a like predicament, tired of its old playthings and languishing for new. Straightway some beneficent unknown produced croquet. The new game hit the public whim, and became the rage at once. In England and America, where everything in the shape of out-door sports is greeted with enthusiasm, the young people seemed to have gone suddenly mad on the subject. Nothing was talked of but croquet, and life appeared to have resolved itself with these enthusiasts into the problem of driving a ball through a number of hoops with a mallet. Nor was the interest confined to the younger portion of the community. Grave reviews discussed the origin of the game and debated on its laws. Philologists fought as only philologists can fight, over the derivation of its name. Clergymen denounced it from the pulpit, while other clergymen did not scruple to play it in the field. It had its code of regulations, its hundreds of clubs, and for a time bade fair to eclipse both base-ball and cricket.

But games, like dogs, have their day, and the day of this one appears to have come. The fickle public has wearied again of its toy, and demands another. We are assured by those indisputable authorities that regulate the most momentous destinies of the gay world, deciding with a word the fate of a mode or the grade of a milliner, that croquet has ceased to be the fashion. Of course, no one with the slightest pretension to style can any longer play it. Yet still we cannot see it pass at once into oblivion without regret, and we venture the heretical hope that still in out-of-the-way places, secure from the awful regards of the haute volée, in quiet country villages or retired nooks upon the sea-shore, the despised pastime may continue to yield unfashionable enjoyment. Croquet, as a social sport, has too many recommendations to be lightly disarded. In the first place, it brings people into the open air, and that of itself is a merit. Again, it affords a moderate amount of physical exercise and a good training for the eye, with just enough mental occupation to make it interesting without being exacting. But its chief merit, and this no slight one, is that it is a game in which both sexes can participate with equal zeal and enjoyment. The out-door sports of men are for the most part selfish and unsocial, such as women cannot or care not to share. But croquet is to field sports what dancing is to in-door pastimes, and a community of interest should preserve it, one would think, from its impending dissolution.

There are no such things in life as trifles, was a wise man's saying, and even croquet may be talked of and written of seriously. Whatever contributes in any degree to human health and enjoyment is assuredly no trifle. And any device which lures our fair countrywomen to seek those best tonics of air and sunlight which they need, is, on the contrary, of the utmost usefulness and importance. Mankind decrees honors to him who invents a mere murderous instrument of slaughter. Why should we hold in less esteem the talents which lighten our toilsum and add to the resources of innocent enjoyment. It is surely more laudable to kill time than to kill men, and the unknown inventor of croquet may perhaps find a place with MOZART and FRANKLIN and WATTS in some future heaven of invention.

MINOR TOPICS.

There are few prettier tales in the romance of history than that so admirably told by the late Lady DUCKS, in Tales of the Peerage and the Peasantry, of the way in which WINIFRED, Countess of Nithsdale, contrived to effect the escape of her husband from the Tower of London, where he was confined under sentence of death for participation in the Scottish rebellion against the House of Hanover in 1715. A matronly lady cut of a somewhat similar incident recently took place in Paris, at the Madrid. During the Commune, Viscount DE MAYNY was sent to the lock-up for refusing to join the insurrectionists. Mlle. GUILLOX, who was acquainted with the Viscount's mother, determined to rescue him, and went to the lock-up. She was granted an interview, and, so disguised him in a workman's suit, which she had concealed about her, that he passed out unnoticed, while Mlle. GUILLOX was talking to the sentinel about a gendarme's place. The marriage of the Viscount and his rescuer was the right consummation of such an episode. The most orthodox three-volume novel couldn't have brought matters to a better conclusion.

A rather unpleasant incident marked the closing night of the Saratoga season. A tête was then given, to which passes seem to have been issued with less discrimination than usually characterizes such affairs with that regiment. During the evening a blanket was reported stolen, and suspicion fell upon the hackmen. The consequence was that, at the close of the festivities, every carriage was stopped at the guard-house, and ladies were put to the ignominious inconvenience of descending, while their vehicle was searched. This proceeding was hardly in accord with the reputation of the fashionable resort as a pleasant place for an evening stroll. The hacks could quite as well have been searched before leaving the entertainment and before taking up their loads, and with ordinary vigilance it seems impossible that such a theft could have been committed. It is to be regretted that even so faint a shadow of annoyance should have clouded the close of so pleasant a visit.

It would seem as if we were never to hear the end of the "poultice" pavement swindle, which the World so persistently charged Mayor HALL with having participated in. The injury done to the furniture of the residents of Fifth-avenue while the filthy stuff remained upon that thoroughfare, will not soon be forgotten by the sufferers. In order to get rid of what was not blown through the windows of the houses, the "Ring" had it carted off to side streets, where the inhabitants were glad of almost any change from the ugly old cobble-stones. Since that time few complaints have been made public. The "poultice" helped to produce an even surface, and looked quite well until it began to break up, as on Fifth-avenue, and to float upon the winds, leaving holes for the reception of decayed vegetable matter, that defy the most industrious efforts of the scavengers to clean out. In Twenty-second-street, between Sixth and Seventh-avenues, much dissatisfaction has been occasioned by a nuisance of this kind. In fact there is no excuse, whatever, for allowing such an abominable nuisance to continue any longer to defile our streets.

On the occasion of a lady, named Atkins, at Amsterdam, passing a brilliant examination at Zurich, a few weeks ago, the rector of the Medical College offered some advice to ladies who contemplate following our country-woman's example. The learned gentleman's admonitions are understood to have had special reference to the fact, which has lately come to light, that there is a tendency on the part of women of very light character to attend medical and surgical lectures, not from any thirst of knowledge, but to gratify objectionable and morbid cravings. It is, of course, most essential that this evil should be guarded against.

There has been a little émeute in the old original Rome, "all along of" an obnoxious editor, of just that kind which one is prepared to read of as occurring at one of those namesakes of the Eternal City which seem always cropping up when one is traveling over the Western prairies. La Frusta is a diminutive organ whose virulent abuse of Roman liberals has recently procured for its editors the Papal blessing; and a more substantial recognition, but five or six young men, furious at its abuse of them and theirs, visited the editorial rooms the other night, and not being able to find their usual occupants, who were reported to be in safe keeping at the Vatican, proceeded on the same sort of improving tour of the premises as the first Mrs. Holbrook lately made of her former husband's house at New-Orleans.

By his recent letter, avowing his adhesion to the cause of his nephew, ALFONSO, son of ISABELLA, the Duke DE MONTPENSIER puts himself in an awkward position with King AMADEUS. It is true that H. R. H. delicately puts his adhesion in the subjunctive mood: "If Spain should again be called on to dispose of her destinies," but there is, of course, little doubt that his statement implies that he will avail himself of any means short of open revolt to compass the return of his wife's family to the throne. It is concluded that a marriage is contemplated between ALFONSO and his cousin, the Duke's daughter. If the members of any family need a healthy infusion of fresh and vigorous blood, and ought not to marry their first cousins, surely they are the members of the House of BOURBON. It would take two generations, at least, to purge the blood imported into the house by CHRISTINA alone.

OBITUARY.

Charles Havens Hunt.

The decease of Charles Havens Hunt, Esq., of the Bar of this City, calls for more than a passing notice. Born in the interior of this State, and educated for the law, he commenced his practice in this City about twenty-five years ago. His superior learning, industry and talents soon won for him an increasing and enviable reputation, as well as the esteem and admiration of the leading members of the profession. In his career he has been associated with the late Surrogate Bradford, John Van Buren, Esq., and others. While Mr. Sedgewick was the United States District-Attorney Mr. Hunt was his assistant, and, on account of the illness, and subsequent death of the former, most of the labors and responsibilities of the office fell on the shoulders of Mr. Hunt.

Notwithstanding the pressure of professional duties, he found time for literary pursuits, preparing, at the request of the publishers, several articles for Appleton's American Encyclopædia. He was the author of a biography of Edward Livingston, a work which appeared in 1864, and met with the approbation of the public. The work is esteemed as a model American biography, and as its author Mr. Hunt is best known to the world. He had also made some progress toward preparing a biography of Martin Van Buren, whose papers had for that purpose been placed in his hands. But his intervals of leisure from his arduous professional duties had been for several years too much broken in upon by his failing health to hope for an early completion of the undertaking.

As an officer of the Association of the Bar of this City Mr. Hunt's advice and labors in procuring evidence of the corruption of the Judges were effective and important.

Honored and admired by a large circle of attached friends, his life was all too short for their hopes.

Exhaustion, caused by the heat of the weather, was the immediate cause of his death, which took place at Cornwall, on the Hudson, on Sunday, the 7th instant, in the forty-eighth year of his age.

BULLETIN BRANCH.

The New-Germany Treaty—Its Terms—The Treaty Policy—Financial Embarrassments—The Monetary Tactics—The Success of the Loan.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, July 1, 1872.

The new treaty with Germany for the purpose of arranging the payment of the indemnity and the evacuation of the remaining Departments occupied by the Germans, was signed on Saturday, Count Arnim finally agreeing to the terms proposed. Only the day before it had been reported on highest authority that the conditions upon which the German Ambassador was instructed to insist, were really simple and natural in themselves, but complicated with so many questions of detail that there was small hope of an agreement. You will probably know all by the time this letter reaches you, for M. Thiers seems to have determined to act with greater energy in the course he has marked out for himself. On the other hand, the Conservatives are determined to check him, and as their movement is growing stronger from day to day, there is no certainty as to the President's ability to triumph when his opponents are no longer hampered by a fear of embarrassing the Government in its negotiations with the Germans. At this moment there is every prospect of a speedy conflict between the legislative and Executive branches of the Government, and I should not like to predict upon my present data what the result will be.

THE PRESIDENT'S POLICY.

The very decided decree of the President upon the financial bill now under discussion has considerably emboldened the majority. I use this word majority as it is used here, having already explained that while there is a majority upon some points there is none at all upon anything approaching a Constitutional question. But with the aid of the Right-Centre, the nearest approach to it is in the Left-Centre under Gen. Chanzy. It is so near it that we have good reason to believe M. Thiers is desirous of having a few more elections, when, with the aid of a little administrative wire-pulling, he could get moderate men enough elected to give him a fair working majority in this portion of the Chamber. How he will manage to get these elections without weakening the Left-Centre at the same time, remains to be seen; but I believe that some plan has been hit upon, and that at the very first serious conflict a certain portion of the Assembly will be sent back to the country. At any rate, circumstances are forcing M. Thiers to act promptly. A very strong party is forming against him upon the question of free trade, and this is now used as the nucleus of the Conservative party the Duc de Broglie is working so hard to form. At Bordeaux the free-traders swept everything before them. At Marseilles there were but one or two men not strong free-traders, and even in the Assembly that party has suddenly found itself strong enough to make a successful stand upon the question of taxes.

FINANCIAL EMBARRASSMENTS.

For once, therefore, M. Thiers has been out-generaled and out-voted. A deficit of some ten millions in the Budget has to be made up, and I may here call attention to the fact that these deficits are constantly occurring. No sooner has the Assembly filled up one by voting certain taxes, than M. Thiers comes in with another and says, "Now give me my tax upon raw material. It is the only way this deficit can be made up." The problem on Friday may be summed up as follows: given, a President whom one wishes to get rid of in some way, and a tax upon raw material one does not wish to vote, what double-barreled combination can be formed which will, at the same time, do away with this tax and with the President who urges it. In a homely way, this shows the thoughts of the majority when called upon to fill the last deficit. With his usual ardor M. Thiers rushed into the tribune again and again to demand his favorite tax, and on Thursday the Chamber replied by refusing it, and by voting a tax upon real-estate mortgages, which will give about half of the sum required. M. Thiers implored the Chamber to reconsider this vote and to give him the tax upon raw material, and as his prayer produced no effect he announced that he should argue the question the next morning, and get an adjournment. Before retiring that night he received a piece of intelligence which altered considerably his views. I should say here that the chairmen of the various committees are elected monthly, and that very day all of the members of the delegation he had sent about their business, except M. d'Audiffret-Pasquier, were elected to three important posts. This showed a very decided feeling of hostility. That evening these chairmen, still indignant at their late treatment, called a meeting, and it was resolved to maintain the vote taken that day even at the sacrifice, if necessary, of M. Thiers. On Friday, when the President was to speak, the Comte Joubert pushed himself into the tribune, and demanded by what right the President of the Republic pretended to speak without having complied with the law in sending a written notice of his intention. This raised a storm, which was only appeased by M. Thiers' rising in his place and saying that he pronounced the floor, and should not attempt to argue further on that day. This was an acknowledgment of defeat, and it is the first of a serious nature the President has yet received.

M. THIERS' TACTICS.

The first act under the new decision was to give a hint in the semi-official journals that the time had come for a change in the Constitution of the Chamber. The Bien Public does the work like a clumsy bungler, and leaks the finesse which one would have expected. It has let the cat out of the bag, as the saying goes, and put the majority into a state of distrust, which will greatly add to its power. Whether true or not, it does not suit them to be told that, being Monarchists, they do not represent the feeling of the country, and hence must give way to men who will sit upon the Left Centre, and they naturally claim to represent their electors as fairly as the Deputies who sit upon other benches do theirs. Secondly, M. Thiers hurried up the negotiations with Count Arnim, and closed at once with him, and M. Rothschild was given authority to go on with the new loan. As for Count Arnim, I believe that he made very few objections, and that he readily agreed to accept the offers made him, for since the authority of M. Thiers is growing weaker from day to day, it is better to sacrifice a little rather than risk having to treat with other parties. Consequently M. Thiers found no trouble in coming to terms promptly. These terms will be presented to the Assembly to-morrow, but, whatever they may be, or however hard they may be, there is little danger of their rejection, unless M. Thiers complicates matters by introducing something which will tend to aid him and to weaken the Chamber. This is feared, even rumored, but I hardly think the President will risk a check, one discussion upon a point of this nature, at the very moment an enormous loan is to be demanded of the country.

THE SUCCESS OF THE LOAN.

Of the success of the Loan I presume there is no manner of doubt. For some time the general feeling of the country has been to pay the indemnity at once, and have done with it. Time and time again the whole man has been offered and refused by M. Thiers. Yet, as matters became pressing, M. Rothschild was called upon, his offer accepted under certain conditions, and instructions given him to have everything ready to act at a moment's notice. The great banking house has not been idle. It is said that he has secured two thousand millions already, and this is pretty well assured by the fact that brokers and dealers are now selling "short," at from a quarter to half per cent. premium. The other millions will be reserved for the public, and from the general feeling I do not hesitate to say that it will be taken in forty-eight hours. M. Rothschild has remarked that it would not be a very difficult operation to draw out five or six milliards, if necessary, for, owing to the marvelous prosperity of the Empire during the past ten years, vast economies have been stored by all classes. The result was, the scene in the Chamber on Friday, a dispatch was sent to M. Rothschild, then in London, and he arrived here on Saturday, in time to arrange with Count Arnim before the signing of the treaty. Then we are to have the vast loan put upon the market at once, upon conditions which will be sent you by telegraph, the indemnity is to be paid at once in a lump, and the soil immediately evacuated. And what next? That is more than I can imagine, for the whole matter depends upon chance. At any rate, the crisis is near at hand, but the relative force of the Executive and the Legislative branches of the Government can only be determined, the indemnity has been paid and the last German soldier has crossed the frontier.

PARIS.

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

That $300,000 Greeleyite Falsehood Demolished.

Mr. Beck and His Bribes Convicted—Rapid Progress of the Straight Democratic Movement—The North Carolina Campaign.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—The Greeleyites are still hard at work manufacturing outrageous lies about the alleged expenditure of $300,000 from the public funds to affect the election in North Carolina. They are simply preparing the way to explain their forthcoming defeat. Your correspondent has investigated this matter thoroughly, and no one, not even the malignant Mr. Beck, can do the same and tell the whole truth afterward, without revealing the fact that the slander is without foundation. It is a notorious fact, and not better known to any one than to Mr. Beck, for he is a member of Congress and was partly responsible for it, that owing to the failure of Congress to pass the Deficiency bill until late in the session, the month of May, I believe, the operations of the Courts in every section of the country were greatly embarrassed, and in some cases entirely suspended. Many of the Marshals hired money at liberal rates of interest, in order not to impede the course of justice, and reimbursed themselves when the Deficiency bill had passed. This accounts for the fact that the requisitions of the Marshals, both for the last half of the last fiscal year as well as for the current quarter, are so close together. They are all thrown into the last sixty days, instead of being distributed according to the terms of the Courts as usual, and this is not alone in regard to North Carolina, but in regard to the Marshals of all the districts. The expenditures of the Courts for North and South Carolina, as everybody knows, for the past year have been about double their usual amount in consequence of the Kuklux trials, and who will say that the suppression of these infamous outrages by the strong arm of the civil authority has not been cheaply as well as thoroughly achieved? New at no time within the past year has the Marshal for North Carolina drawn more than $25,000 in any one requisition. Before he can get that money his requisition must be approved by the Attorney-General. Then it must pass the Secretary of the Treasury, which it only can do after an investigation of the state of his account. After he gets it he is required by law to deposit it in a designated national depository, which reports every two weeks the state of his balance to the United States Treasurer. When he checks it out, he must state in his check the precise purpose to which the money is applied. He is required to present regular vouchers for every expenditure, and these vouchers must have the approval of the Judge of the Court. They then pass the Auditor and the Controller, so that it is impossible that any money should be improperly applied in the first instance, without the direct collusion of the Attorney-General and Secretary of the Treasury, or improperly expended in the second instance, without collusion between the Marshal, the Judge, the Auditor, and the Controller. A Marshal may draw money and fail to render his accounts and thus become a defaulter, but this is not yet charged, even in North Carolina, though it is true of one or more Ex-Marshals who are now loud-mouthed for Greeley. The statement that heretofore not more than $5,000 has been checked from the Treasury at one time for the purposes for which Marshals draw is a transparent falsehood, for which there is not even Mr. Beck's warrant. Mr. Beck put it, "until within a few years" and an examination shows that for many years past the requisitions of Marshals have reached $25,000 to $30,000, according to the necessities of the Courts.

THE STRAIGHT DEMOCRACY.

The bitter opposition to Greeley among the Democracy, which took shape at Baltimore, is rapidly developing, and the proposition for a Convention at Louisville in September is receiving many endorsements from Democrats in all parts of the country. Col. Blanton Duncan furnishes the following list of gentlemen from whom he has received letters or assurances since the Baltimore Convention that they will join in the movement against Greeley: Judge Robertson, Judge Daniel Colberry well, James Barbour, Esq., Gen. Henry A. Wise, and John A. Lyons, of Virginia; Congressman Hanks, of Arkansas; Congressman Boyd Winchester, of Kentucky; Col. W. G. Brooks, Capt. Fred. Beall, Col. M. M. Cummins, Gen. W. R. Tyson, W. P. Landrum, Col. J. T. Donald and S. A. Derryhill, Esq., all of Mississippi; Hon. T. W. Hora, of Wisconsin; Hon. Tilton E. Doolittle and Hon. V. E. Eaton, of Connecticut; Hon. W. C. Gandy, Col. Thomas J. Turner, Chicago; Dr. C. H. Hamill, Joliet, Ill.; H. E. Edwards, Springfield, Ill.; Mr. Braisted, Freeport, Ill.; Alex. Heldane, Esq., Orie County, Illinois; F. Stahl, Esq., Galena, Ill.; F. A. Garrington, Houston, Texas, and many others.

PERSONAL.

The President is expected here for a Cabinet meeting on Thursday morning. Secretary Fish will return to-morrow. Secretary Boutwell leaves to-morrow for North Carolina. He will make his first speech on Tuesday afternoon or evening at Greensboro, and on the following day will speak at Charlotte. Then he will probably proceed to Morganton, in the western portion of the State, among the mountains.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

The Smithsonian report for 1871 is now in the hands of the public printer, but the date of its issue is very uncertain, owing to the immense accumulation of work in the Government Office on the order of Congress and the Departments. The printing of evidence and reports from the Washington and Alabama Railroad Committee has prevented the usual progress being made with the regular work, and though an astonishing amount is turned off daily, it would be most remarkable if there was not delay in some of the usual publications.

THE UTAH INDIANS.

Mr. John Delano, Chief Clerk in the Interior Department, returned this morning. He left at Salt Lake the remaining members of the Commission, which has gone to meet the Sioux Indians of the North-west, and devoted his attention to business for the Department with the Indians in Utah Territory. He will soon make a report to the Secretary.

WHAT SHARPITT OF GREELEY REPUBLICANS.

A gentleman just returned from a trip through Ohio reports that Greeley Republicans are very scarce in that State. He says Greeley has a great many friends in Ohio, but they all say they cannot vote for him as a Democratic candidate. As the leader and candidate of a reform movement and not a sham reform movement there are many who might have voted for him; but they do not see any reform likely to come from Baltimore, and they will not break from their old party ranks simply to join another party have Minerva opposed. The gentleman also reports that the campaign has not actively opened. Republicans everywhere inquiring after Greeley men, but in many counties not more than one or two among Republicans could be discovered.

THE MAILS.

Among the documents just printed at the Government Printing Office is one of 700 pages of abstracts of offers for carrying the mails. It is noteworthy that in many cases the bids were four or five times in excess of the amounts which the service accorded.

THE NEW LOAN.

The interview of Jay Cooke & Co. with Secretary Boutwell, yesterday, in relation to the new loan, had no definite result further than this, that the Secretary will not at present attempt to put any more of it on the European market, but await more favorable circumstances.

MR. BOUTWELL GOING SOUTH.

Secretary Boutwell, who will leave Washington to-morrow morning for North Carolina, has already prepared the speeches which he intends to deliver in that State.

Balloon Ascension—An Accident and a Generation at Sea in a Basket.

BOSTON, July 14.—The balloon ascension which was made on Saturday in this city, was a complete success. The companies of the basket were Prof. King and Mr. L. L. Holden, an attaché of the Boston Journal. The ascension commenced, but very slowly, for twenty minutes, during which time the balloon was in sight of the Common, when it finally disappeared. Its rate of speed was not over fifteen miles per hour. About two miles north-west of South Reading a descent was made in the open field, when the occupants, consisted of the aeronauts, left the balloon and went into the village. They then ventured again and went into the air a second time, and finally came down near Wakefield, where the party were taken in tow by a yacht and landed on the shore. They arrived in the City this afternoon in good condition.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

A Freight-Train in a Wash-Out—The Engineer and Fireman Killed.

NEW-ORLEANS, July 14.—A heavy freight-train broke away on the embankment of the Mobile and New-Orleans Railroad yesterday morning, near East Hancocks. The engine and twenty cars of a freight-train were wrecked, and the engineer, A. Carl, of Mobile, and the fireman, John Cuman, of New-York, were killed.

Wreck of a Milk Train—Several Persons Injured.

DOYLESTOWN, Penn., July 14.—The morning train on the North Pennsylvania Railroad, shortly after leaving this place, this morning, ran over a cow, throwing the engine and two milk cars of the track, down an embankment nearly thirty feet deep. The fireman was seriously injured, and the engineer, the milk agent, the baggage-master, and one or two other persons on the cars were somewhat injured.

INHUMAN CRUELTY.

Report of the Grand Jury on the St. Louis House of Refuge—Brutal Treatment of the Boys.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 14.—The Grand Jury have made a report in regard to affairs in the House of Refuge, in which they say they have discovered that great atrocities have been sometimes practiced upon the inmates. They cite three cases where young boys have been terribly whipped, and one case where pieces of flesh have actually been cut out of the boy's back by the lash. The boys have also been placed in a dark dungeon for trivial offenses, and kept there forty-eight hours without food or drink. The report says the House of Refuge, as now conducted, is a deep and damning disgrace, and urges the Court to change its whole management as speedily as possible. Mr. F. S. W. Gleason, who has been Superintendent of the institution twenty years, will publish a card to-morrow, pronouncing the statement of the Grand Jury exaggerations, and asking a suspension of public opinion until the next meeting of the Board of Management.

MAINE.

Rally of the Republicans in Nemos—Nembrons Hall Crowded.

BANGOR, Me., July 14.—The Republicans held the first meeting of the campaign at Nembrons Hall last evening. The hall was crowded. Speeches were made by Senators Hamlin and Chandler, and Hons. John A. Peters and Lewis Barker.

The Expedition of the Steamer Pantalin—Gen. Ryan Denies the Spanish Stories.

KEY WEST, Fla., July 14.—Gen. Ryan arrived this afternoon on the schooner Express, from Nassau. He denies the truth of the Spanish statements of the capture of the Fannie's troops, and says no cannon were landed.

The belief current of these two brothers is attributed to their having been in some mysterious manner implicated in the foul treatment of the murdered girl.

Terrible Scene in a Condemned Street—A Woman in Flames.

From the Cincinnati Commercial, July 13.

At about 7½ o'clock last evening, on Broadway, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth, while people (as usual these hot days) were sitting in their front doors or standing around in groups, they were suddenly startled by a terrible scene—by the rush from No. 195, of a fiery apparition that sped up the street toward Fifteenth-street, with surrounding shrieks of fear and horrible suffering. The apparition was a large, fleshy woman, whose garments were already completely caught up in the flames that enveloped her and were shooting above her head as she ran. Women and children, and even men, sprang from her path as she rushed along, until she reached Fifteenth-street, when two or three men caught her and threw her into the gutter, while another brought water and dashed it upon her and her burning dress, that had now about exhausted near feet of cotton and woolen, were extinguished. Only a few fragments of charred clothing remained, and the lower half of her body was literally roasted. Her lower limbs, with the skin, were hanging from her in shreds, and great patches of flesh were blackened raw. She was a terrible spectacle to look upon. She was taken first to a saloon close by, and then to her home at No. 195. She was found to be Mrs. Clara Sommerhabel, wife of H. Sommerhabel. She has been an employment nursery there, and is quite well known. It was ascertained that she had come home under the influence of too much beer, and that while lighting a lamp, in a careless and reckless way, she had dropped a burning match into a vessel of coal-oil. The flames were immediately communicated to her dress, and almost instantly she was a mass of fire.

THE INDIANS IN CHURCH.

The Apaches and Sioux Received in the Reformed Church—They Express Their Desire for Teachers and Schools.

A large congregation assembled at the Reformed Church, corner of Fifth-avenue and Twenty-first-street, last evening, consequent on the announcement that Gen. O. O. Howard would introduce there the Chiefs and representatives of the Sierra Blanco and Pariat Apaches. The exercises commenced with prayer and singing, after which Rev. Dr. Ferris delivered an address. In the course of his remarks, after giving a brief description of the duties of Indian agents and others whose duty it is to look after the several tribes, he said that, under the old Administration, his agents were appointed by politicians, while here of office expired with the Administration, and as a consequence they used their time mainly to make money out of their position, and were guilty of many disreputable practices. The present Administration happily has accomplished a great change. A Board of Indian Commissioners has been established, and the management of Indian affairs, and the present agents were appointed by religious denominations, the result of which is that not only are the healthy wants of the poor tribes cared for, but their spiritual welfare is also attended to. Indian wars have cost the Government over $100,000,000, and it is a fact to be that the amicable arrangement which Gen. Howard has succeeded in establishing between the Apaches and the white men have saved this country at least $10,000,000.

Gen. Howard then introduced Santos, who represents 1,200 Apaches. Through his interpreter he said: "I am very much pleased with my visit to this city and to have met the President of the United States, and I am very much gratified to be here tonight. My people are very poor, and I came here to see what the white men would do for us. I desire very much that my people have schools, that their children may be educated and become more civilized. And I hope you will send teachers to us. I think it must have been God who sent Gen. Howard out to us, and I only wish he had come years before. My tribe has one little school-room, and a good teacher instructs fifty of our children there every day. I hope God will put it into your hearts to send more teachers."

Ascension, the Chief of another tribe, was next introduced. He said: "I want to say the same as Santos; all that my tribe wants is peaceable homes and schools, like you have here."

Gen. Howard then introduced ten representatives of an Apache tribe, a number of whose followers were massacred at the "Camp Grant massacre." The father-in-law of the Chief of the tribe related to the interpreter the whole history of the bloody affray, and in conclusion said: "We want to be at peace with everybody. We had twenty-seven of our children stolen. Gen. Howard got six of them back for us, but the Mexicans have still twenty-one of them. Gen. Grant, the Great Father, must help us to try and get them all back, and then we shall be happy." Aslontano, Miguel, Pedro, Ess-Salbestie and Charles Arathan were also introduced.

Gen. Howard, in conclusion, briefly described the homes of these tribes and their habits, and gave a most interesting description of the difficulties he has had to encounter in treating with them. He also exhorted all those who could, to do as much as lay in their power to send the Gospel to these poor Indians.

AMUSEMENTS.

Announcements of the Day.

Mme. Peschka-Leutner is to sing this evening at the Academy of Music. At Wallack's "The Long Strike" is to be reproduced. The Vokes will to-night effect their reappearance at the Union-square Theatre. Mlle. Geraldine is to perform a new and startling feat at the Olympic. And at Wood's "Notre Dame," a fresh drama, will be made known to the public.

Personal.

Mr. Chas. E. Perry, our Consul at Aspinwall, sails today to resume his post after a short leave of absence. He has been made thoroughly acquainted with the views of the Department of State in the matter of the Edgar Stewart, seized by Commander Davis, of the Wyoming, in the Port of Aspinwall, and is intrusted with authority to withdraw the guard and claim the vessel, if he is still there on his return. Mr. Perry's position at Aspinwall is a delicate and important one, owing to the fact that the United States of Columbia have acknowledged the belligerency of the Cubans, while Spain does not recognize the Government of Columbia itself. The duty of protecting American vessels without involving differences with these two Governments is a puzzling one, and requires sound judgment, tact and firmness, as was shown in the case of the Virginius. Mr. Perry's decided and firm position in this affair has met with the hearty approval of the Government.

A Fire in the City.

During a fight at the corner of West Washington-place and Sixth-avenue early yesterday morning, Catharine Bohan, of No. 122 West Tenth-street, struck Michael Behan, of No. 124 Elizabeth-street, over the head with a pitcher, and wounded him dangerously.

During a picnic festival at Public Union Park on Saturday night, Wm. Bradley, a car-driver, acted in a very disorderly manner. Henry McGonigal, of No. 60 Second-avenue, one of the floor committee of the picnic, remonstrated, when Bradley stabbed him in the head, inflicting a severe wound. He was arrested and held at Yorkville Police Court.

At the Tombs Police Court yesterday, George Wilson was held for trial for kicking Mary A. Williams, of No. 113 Frankfort-street, in the face.

A case of mayhem occurred at the corner of Washington and Watts streets yesterday morning, during a fight James Carroll bit off the nose of James McCabe, of No. 94 Watts-street. Carroll was badly cut above the head. He was held at the Tombs yesterday.

Yesterday morning, at two ball-doors occasioned a dispute between James Clowrman, of No. 320 East Thirty-eighth-street, and James Feeney, of Forty-first-street, near Park-avenue, early yesterday morning in the liquor saloon of Michael Fay, at Thirty-ninth-street and Second-avenue, during which Feeney knocked Clowman in the leg, making a severe wound.

Becoming a Prisoner—A Rough Shot by an Officer.

While Officer Farrell of the Twenty-first Precinct, was on route to the Station-house with a prisoner last night, he was surrounded by a crowd of rowdies at the corner of Thirty-fifth-street and First-avenue and his prisoner rescued. The roughs began beating him with his club when Farrell drew a revolver and shot the chief of the rowdies, Robert Palmer of No. 340 East Thirty-sixth-street, through the hand. Palmer was locked up in the Thirty-fifth-street Station.

A Man Kills His Brother in a Quarrel About Cattle.

From the Waupaca (Wis.) Republican, July 5.

The town of Belmont, Portage County, was the scene last Sunday of one of the most horrible murders that have come to our knowledge for many a day. Two brothers, named Thomas and Richard DeMaig, living neighbors to each other, had had difficulty about some cattle belonging to Thomas, which had broken into Richard's fields several times. Last Sunday Richard went to his fields and found his brother's cattle in his crops. He had a gun with him, and started for Thomas' house, it is thought, with the intention of killing him. He met Thomas on the road. Hot words followed and Thomas threatened to thrash Richard, and starred toward him with a club in his hand, when Richard drew up his gun and fired, killing him instantly. It is reported that a young man came along the road soon after and found Thomas lying dead in the road and Richard standing near by. Richard reached that he "wasn't a bit sorry" for what he had done. He went to Stevens Point on Monday and delivered himself up to the authorities.

The Earthquake on Monday Felt in Missouri.

From the Louisville (Ky.) Tribune, July 15.

If anybody has been disposed to question the ability of North Missouri to get up tremors on a large scale, such doubting must now be laid aside, for on Monday night about 10½ o'clock, we had an earthquake. Some persons had noticed a slight shock about 8½ or 9 o'clock. It was so slight, however, as to be barely perceptible to those who were quietly sitting or lying down. But the shock at 10½ was a distinct earthquake, single one, accompanied by the usual coarse, rumbling sound of an earthquake. The duration of the shock was very short. Some say that there were two shocks at very short intervals, with a tremor intervening. We are informed by some of the older residents here that this is not the first time that earthquakes have visited Missouri. At least three or four have been felt in here before.

BERLIN AND ROME.

The Federal Council of Germany Not Yet Decided on the Question—Civil Marriage—The Jesuits Abroad—The Agents of the Jesuits—A Fatal Alternative.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BERLIN, Saturday, June 14, 1872.

The Federal Council of Germany has not resisted the present act upon it by public opinion. With only one dissentient voice, it has adopted the amendment to the government bill passed by Parliament against the Jesuits. Bavaria and Saxony, though Catholic Governments, have followed the example of their usual ally, Wurtemberg, and even Oldenburg has recanted its theoretical objections. The atom of dissent imparted into the Council makes an almost ludicrous effect. When it is told that the adjecting power represents exactly the thousandth part of the empire, viz.: the elder principality of Reuss, hamlets as area of not five German square miles, and a population of little above forty thousand. That diminutive State considers its independence sovereignty infringed by the new law. It is not likely that Prince Bismarck will oppose the resolutions passed by the two subsidiary assemblies. Had he been so disposed, he would probably have made his influence felt in the Federal Council, and thus throw the impopular responsibility of a refusal upon that body. In point of fact, whatever his views and intentions may be, he has no reason to resent unfavorably the fall which, though pronouncing a fatal principle, leaves him practically as much intitude in the application as he was cautious assures. If it is his will to persecute the Jesuits, both bills supply him with powerful means; if he desires to spare them, he can make a dead letter of either.

THE EXECUTIVE PROVISIONS.

The Federal Council has advanced one more step on its Roman crusade. Being intrusted with the devising of a machinery for carrying out the new principle, it has promptly committed that task to its own Judicial Committee, which has presented its report after only three days' consideration. The personal question it has solved in a particularist sense likely to grate upon the public ear, though Parliament left the Council free to exercise its own discretion; still it was not thought that the decision would be otherwise than in favor of the Central power. Several additional clauses are included to effect uniformity of action and to conciliate the offended Unionist mind. Though the executive is left wholly to the State police, it is expected that every individual case shall, in not more than three months, be reported to the Imperial Chancellor, who thus assumes the character of a general supervisor and consulting spirit. The Governments are instructed to compile lists enumerating the orders living under the definition of "kindred to the Jesuit Order" found within their country, the alien members of such orders—whom, of course, they are assumed to have served with notices of expulsion—and the native members whom they shall have felt justified in leaving at large, or to whom they have sustained special distress. In every case in the full name to be added, with personal notes attached. A somewhat cumbrous machine is thus devised to insure a common working of the act by keeping Governments de rapport by means of the Chancellor. It deserves special attention that the Committee recommend the Governments to allow the native Jesuits as much latitude as is irreducible in the allotment of districts, the choice of which is to be left, to a great extent, to the doomed prisoners themselves.

OBLIGATORY CIVIL MARRIAGE.

I may at the same time remark that the Federal Council has likewise taken into consideration the second anti-clerical measure passed by Parliament, viz., the resolution providing for the introduction of obligatory civil marriage. That bill is, however, condemned to a place among the legislative material for next session, the vote already passed being thus à priori quashed. It is significant, however, of the progress which secular opinions are making that the Council should have touched the measure at all, or at least with so great promptness, assigning M. Völich's motion to the consideration of the same Judicial Committee. A second proof of the advance of opinions in favor of civil marriage is furnished by a branch of the ecclesiastical system, viz., the Pastoral Conference of Wurtemburg, a few days ago, assembled at Esslingen, which, though loth to adopt the secular banner, has still declared it to be in its opinion a duty of clergymen to prepare the public mind for the coming change. If even clergymen thus bow to the new idea, its victory can be considered only a matter of time, and not of very long time either.

THE NUMBERS AFFECTED.

To return to the Jesuits. The numbers affected by the new bill in the German Empire has now been ascertained with arithmetical accuracy as amounting to 723, a good deal more than had been first anticipated. The figure has been taken from the authenticated catalogue of the Order itself, printed in Vienna about a year ago. It may be interesting to note that the total continents of Jesuits, according to that same catalogue, comprises 8,869 members, distributed over twenty-two provinces, the most populous of which is Castile, boasting 765 members; Germany comes next, with 723; Austro-Hungary has no more than 454. In Germany Jesuits are supposed to be established only in Prussia and in the Bavarian Diocese of Ratisbon. The German province, however, includes the Austrian Diocese of Feldhiver, comprising thirty Jesuits, who ought to be deducted from the above figure, but it is believed that the addition made in Prussia and Ratisbon in the last twelve months amply make up for the difference. The 723 Jesuits, Prof. von Schulte, in his latest work on clerical statistics, treats merely as a staff of officers, commanding an army of no less than eighteen thousand regular priests and eleven thousand other servants of the Church. Even this figure falls short of the full force of the ecclesiastical machine of which the Jesuits pull the wires, for M. von Schulte rightly assumes the scholars of ecclesiastical colleges and seminaries to be more under Jesuit inspiration still than the full-grown priests; and the contingent is by their addition swelled to some fifty thousand of both sexes, unsurpassed in any service of the world in discipline or activity.

MOVES OF THE JESUITS.

An army so numerous as this can hardly be expected to surrender without resistance. It has not indeed the power of material force to oppose, and its agitations proceed too much in silence to be noticed, beside the open and boisterous attacks directed against it. It has, however, strategical skill on its side and has not been slow to follow its dictates in the direction indicated in my last. The beautiful establishment at the Lake of Lanch, familiar to all visitors of the Rhine, has already changed hands and become externally the property of a private person, though its object and management remain unchanged. Moreover, Count Hoensroech, possessing extensive estates on the Prussian frontier in the Dutch Province of Limburg, has placed these at the free disposal of Jesuits who may be expelled from Germany. There will not remain isolated instances of the clever shifts of the Jesuit Army. Professor Von Schulte, in his book already quoted, shows the conventual orders in Germany to have applied for official sanction, indispensable for any act of foundation or enlargement—actually not one since 1848, when they first met with a repulse. Still they have increased to a marvelous extent, adding houses to houses, and members to members. Though it might be hard to obtain a license for a new monastery, or for a fresh endowment devoted to conventual objects, nothing was easier than for a church already established to accumulate property, or for private persons to administer ostensibly their own fortunes to the benefit of their orders. The Dutch Colony of Jesuits on the Prussian border seems a dangerous settlement for its neighbors, for unless Government surround it with sentries, there will be nothing to prevent the inmates from constantly crossing the frontier and acting practically as if they were in the land itself. A few agents have also settled at various other points of the extended frontier line would, to a great extent, make round Belgium and Holland. It may, however, be argued that these practical and artificial arts will disappear from the withdrawal of the provisions from the emigrant body, or the dissolution of the province seems a far more tempting remedy, and the Pope has it in his power at any time to invest another order with the attributes now possessed by the proscribed brethren.

A FATAL ALTERNATIVE.

The Pope has had a fresh opportunity of venting his fury against the German Empire, and he has done so in an unmeasured manner. The brief of the 15th inst., addressed to Cardinal Antonelli, has not conciliated people on this side of the Alps, but his address to the German Reading Club at Rome, announced on the 20th inst., goes far beyond anything hitherto said against the new power, which, according to the infallible prophecy of the Pope, is like Achilles to pursue from a wound inflicted on the heel, through his child, by Divine intervention instead of a mortal staff. The principal passage of the speech in which his Holiness fairly ties Prince Bismarck with the general attack on the Church of Rome, and charges him with leading the movement.

"It is the free Minister of a powerful Government, he said, who, after his victorious campaign on the field of battle, has placed himself at the head of the persecution. I have lay him know, (and this shall be no secret, all the world may know it,) that a triumph without moderation cannot endure; that a triumph exceed against truth and the Church is short-lived; that persecution must inevitably imperil the stability and the permanency of other successes. I have caused it to be called to his mind that the Catholics have to the present announcement loyal to Governments, again and again have bishops, priests and eminent laymen explained to him how complete was their appreciation of the benevolence of Governments and of the liberty which the Church has been allowed. Government itself has, on the other hand, repeatedly expressed its satisfaction at the conduct of the Catholics. In the face of these official declarations and avowals, how is it intelligible that the Catholics should all of a sudden have changed into people refusing obedience, engaging in dangerous intrigues and plotting to subvert the State? These questions I have caused to be put to the Prime Minister; the reply I still await—possibly because there is no reply to truth. Let us raise our eyes to God, stand fast in your faith; let us commune in unity. Who knows if not soon the stone will drop from the height which is destined to crush the feet of the Colossus?" The oration concludes with an application of the old Christian doctrine, that persecution is sent not to destroy, but to purify and strengthen the Church. The Pope would certainly not have been more outspoken, and his prayer against the German Colossus, said to have called forth hopes and rejoicings in France, has provoked general and violent indignation among us. It is the first time that Pio Nono has thus openly avowed his hostility to the Empire. The breach of etiquette is likewise resented, viz., by addressing the remonstrance to the Minister instead of the Sovereign. That Germany does not in response to these affronts care to maintain its diplomatic relations with the Curia on a particularly friendly footing is indirectly by the recall of the Prussian Charge d'Affaires, Barnim, who has been replaced by the official provisionally in charge of a Bubikuttenant in the army, M. Simons, who has hitherto acted as a sort of attaché. After the rebuff on the Hochelohe affair, and the open hostilities that have gone passed between the two Courts, it is not considered likely that M. von Derenthall's place will at all be filled again.

PARIS PICTURES.

The French Metropolis "Out of the Season"—Parisians' Amusements.

Paris (June 29) Correspondence of the London Daily Telegraph.

That cold, cheerless part of the year which the Upper Ten have agreed to call the "season" is over; the sun is pouring down upon us its warmest blessings; the trees have put forth their coolest shade, and the population has turned out like one man to take a long and lively "breather." Most of the citizens whose business compels them to reside here from one end of the year to the other, do, indeed, go occasionally for a day or two; but the Summer, and especially the Sunday, is made so pleasant for them, that on a holiday or fête day a great many more provincials come into Paris than Parisians go out. From 8½ to 7 P. M. the Champs Elysées and Bois de Boulogne are thronged with those modest but comfortable equipages known to all the world as Victorias. For a moderate sum the Parisian cockney can take his wife out for a long drive in the delicious alleys of that ever popular wood. If he does not do it early in the day, he cannot resist it in the evening. When the sun has gone down, and John has lit his lamps, the aspect of the innumerable vehicles glittering in one continuous stream from the Boulevard to the Bois reminds one of nothing so much as of a corps d'armée of glow-worms making a triumphant march through the city.

In spite of the heat, which is, at times, several degrees higher on the thermometer than it is possible to be pleasant, a great, or at greater part of the theatres remain open, and are well patronized by an easily-satisfied public. But of all the places of recreation, those which are situated in the Champs Elysées enjoy the greatest popularity. Thither, when the day has darkened to comparative coolness, countless thousands flock. Whole families—or, to suggest a larger unit, whole family parties—adjourn after dinner to the spring-bottomed chairs which line, in double and treble rows, the fashionable side of the joyous rendezvous. Then we have the Concert Bosselevre, better known to the visiting public as the Concert Musard, where the company is select, because it has a taste for high-class music, and besides, a very strict supervision of the police. Behind the curtain is those persons who are unfortunate enough not to combine the necessary qualifications for admission. On Friday night—the time specially reserved for extraordinary performances, M. Bosselevre charges the cars of his patrons with the most perfect execution of select passages from classic music. You may need there all those of the Upper Ten who are due Paris. For the modest trifle of two francs you may refresh your memory with all the chefs d'œuvres, and mix with diplomats, ministers and princes of finance, just as if you were living under a model Republic. Over the way there is another place much frequented by those who prefer the music of Strauss and the cancans of the Parisienne. The most consistently popular haunt of the Parisian population—the circus, once of the Empress—opens its doors every night with equal success. The clowns have learned new tricks and put on new skins; the maidens who dash through paper hoops and alight again on the double mixed are more graceful and astonishing; the horses of the present century, to our friends from the country, is unquestionably the Cafe Chantant. A wonderful institution is this open-air entertainment. The four little tents pitched in the centre of the thickest groves of trees, shrubs and flowers are crowded to suffocation every night. Thousands of joyous people bent on giving their full attention to the latest comic song and joining in the chorus of an old favorite. Entrance free, and consumption of drink compulsory—these are the conditions on which the treat is provided; and although the consumption is one-third as dear again as it was two years ago, there seems to be no lessening of money left for the gratification of luxuries of this kind. And yet this is not all—indeed, it would be hard to exhaust the catalogue of the various treasures which are to be met with in these flowery fields of mirth and music. There is also food of a substantial quality for the hungry, and refreshment for the neighborhood of all this Arcadian revelry. The white tablecloths of Laurent and Ledoyen are there, looking more inviting under the honeysuckle and caterpillars than the gilded halls of the Café Riche or the Maison d'Or.

As if there were not sufficient fun to be extracted from these sunset pleasures, one of the most Parisian spirits that the Republic has brought back, the Duc de la Tremouille, has just rented from the State the historical Chateau de Rambouillet, and is preparing to convert it into a gigantic pleasure-garden for his numerous friends and acquaintances, however remote. The fête which he intends to give are to have all the savor of novelty. The guests are all to wear the characteristic costumes of 300 years ago, or country on which they belong. Of course they are to be mediæval fashions for in these degenerate days there is little or no distinguishing dress worn by French or foreign peasants. Lunch will be provided on little tables dotted about on the green, and there are to be sports of every description, and scenes in which actors or mountebanks are to perform. As the Duke is reasonably rich, the proceeds of this enterprise will not increase the funds of the Société Charitable, or relief fund for the peasantry who suffered in the late war. In the evening the castle where Francis I. died will be illuminated a giorno, and the park transformed into an enchanted garden by the suspension of Chinese lamps on the trees. Dinners, concerts, balls and a thousand and one surprises, each more attractive than the others, will fill the spectator with delight.

How long ago, when one thinks of all these festivities, it seems since civil war was raging in and around these walls—since shells were bursting and scattering destruction in every quarter—since the dingdong roar of cannon and mitrailleuses was heard day and night for months together! Yet even as I write I hear the sharp rattle of a battery of light guns, and reminding the strolling wayfarer that Paris is still in a state of siege.

Judge Alphonso Taft of Cincinnati.

From the Cincinnati Gazette, July 13.

The election of Judge Taft, of this city, as one of the trustees of Yale College, was a tribute as deserved as it was high and graceful. In the midst of arduous professional duties Judge Taft has found time to devote to the interests and advancement of education. The Cincinnati University has found no abler friend or more enthusiastic champion than he, and this was everywhere known here as a speedy recognition of services in everything that relates to their Alma Mater. Of large culture, fine scholarship, and high attainments, Judge Taft has well earned the compliment that has been paid him.

THE POETS.

Who Succeeded to the Turkish Throne.

A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, writing from Constantinople, on June 28, says: "The question of the succession to the throne still creates much excitement here. Murad Effendi (son of Abdul Medjid,) who, according to the principle hitherto adopted, would be the rightful heir, is thirty-two years old, and is a prince of considerable ability and learning; he is very popular in the country, and the belief is very general that if he were supplanted by the eldest son of the present Sultan this would be nothing less than a violation of the Koran. It is said that the present Grand Vizier, before obtaining his appointment, promised the Sultana Valide that her grandson, the young Prince Youssouf Izeddin, would be nominated heir to the throne provided he (the Grand Vizier) should remain in office for a period of two years; and this is supposed to be the true explanation of the warmth with which he advocates a change in the succession. His plans, however, meet with no much opposition that there is but little chance of their being realized except by a coup d'état; and, indeed, some such consummation seems to be presaging, if the many indications of the approaching removal of such public incendiaries from their posts, and the appointment of men entirely devoted to the Grand Vizier, as their successors, and especially from the new policy he has inaugurated toward Russia, with whom he is daily becoming more intimate. The part played by the Cabinet of St. Petersburg in this intrigue is only too evident, being simply a repetition of the policy of the Empress Catherine toward Poland before the partition of that unfortunate country. So revolutionary a measure as a change in the succession of Turkey was as sure of Russian support as it is sure of the movement among the Ottoman subjects of the Sultan, or any other means of precipitating the disruption of its empire. Notwithstanding this, the semi-official papers continue to advocate an alliance with Russia, and the influence of the Grand Vizier is undoubtedly increasing."

The Road runs from Buffalo to the Detroit River, and is the Eastern link in the new AIR LINE FROM BUFFALO TO CHICAGO, and has been under construction for about two years past by railroad men who have seen the necessity for a STEEL RAIL, LOW GRADE SHORT ROUTE between the great railroad systems which diverge from Chicago, Toledo and Buffalo.

Among the builders of the road, by whose cash subscriptions 270 miles (out of 300) have already been graded, bridged and made ready for the superstructure, a large part of the steel rails bought, all of the materials for the stations, and a part of the equipment purchased, are:

MILTON COURTRIGHT, JOHN P. TRACY, DAVID DOWS, WM. L. SCOTT, HENRY FARNHAM, R. A. FORSYTH, HENRY H. PORTER, JOHN M. BURKE, M. L. SYKES, JR., B. F. ALLEN, all directors; other in the Chicago and North west, or the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; GEO. OPDYKE, of the Midland Road; JOHN B. ALLEN, SIDNEY DILLON, DANIEL DREW, J. S. CASEMENT, J. & J. CASEY, C. S. CHAPMAN, JOHN ROSS, DAVID STEWART, and F. H. WINSTON.

THE ROAD WILL BE

33 MILES SHORTER THAN ANY OTHER ROAD,

either BUILT or in contemplation between Buffalo and Chicago, and will also shorten the distance between Toledo and Buffalo twenty-three miles.

THE MAXIMUM GRADE on the entire line does not exceed FIFTEEN FEET to the mile—and Ninety-six per cent. of the road IS STRAIGHT.

THE ROAD WILL BE COMPLETED and in running order on or before Dec. 31 of this year.

The principal and interest of the bonds are payable either in New-York, London or Frankfort.

We confidently recommend the bonds to all classes of investors.

(ORGANIZED AUG. 1, 1870.)

AUTHORIZED CAPITAL STOCK, $1,000,000

The wholly unpaid of the authorized Capital Stock of this Company now having been issued, the balance thereof will be issued to subscribers at par, payments for same to be made in four installments of 25 per cent. each, viz.:

25 PER CENT. JULY 15, 1872,
25 PER CENT. AUG. 1, 1872,
25 PER CENT. SEPT. 1, 1872,
25 PER CENT. OCT. 1, 1872.

The Subscription Books now open at the office of the undersigned will be closed July 15, or as soon as the new stock is exhausted.

The total amount of Stock issued at this time is $424,700, and on the basis the Company shows a present surplus of $126,950 97, and is now doing a flourishing business. Our shops are now steadily employed in their established works, and they now have on hand $1,250,000 of work for various railroads in the United States, among which may be mentioned the

CHICAGO, R. I. & PACIFIC,
CHICAGO & NORTH-WESTERN,
MICHIGAN CENTRAL,
MISSOURI PACIFIC,
ATLANTIC & PACIFIC, &c.

and the Company is now offered work to the amount of over $6,000,000, including some of the largest bridges ever built in this country, to accept of which, and further business, necessitates a larger working capital, as immense amounts of materials have to be kept constantly on hand, and the Company is frequently obliged to receive, in part payment for their work, railroad and other bonds, which are perfectly good securities, but not always immediately marketable.

The career of the American Bridge Company, though brief, has already fully demonstrated the profitableness of the enterprise. The Company has manufactured since its incorporation, and up to the first of December, 1871, a total of 38,427 feet of bridges, 18 turning tables, and 18 iron roofs, and pneumatic and screw pile substructures, costing $3,400,000, and have facilitated the introduction of pneumatic piles unsurpassed by any Company in the country, and a capacity for the construction of at least 150 feet of bridges for every working day in the year.

The Iron Railroad and Highway Bridge at Leavenworth, of three spans of 347 feet each, and the Union Pacific Bridge across the Missouri River, of eleven spans of 250 feet each, were constructed by this Company.

The net profit arising from this business, as shown by the books of the Company up to the 31st of March, 1872, was the sum of $373,489 14, or at the rate of $224,093 28 per annum, being over 54 per cent. upon the capital stock then outstanding. With the proposed new structures, machinery, &c., the Company will have much greater capacity, and the proceeds of the increased issue of stock will enable them to buy material for cash, thereby making a saving of from $50,000 to $75,000 per year.

The Company can undoubtedly, on above basis, make dividends of from 30 to 35 per cent. per annum on the full amount of the capital, $1,000,000, with a fair prospect of considerable increase.

The undersigned are prepared to give to those inquiring the fullest details and entire satisfaction regarding the reliability of the Company's statements, and the unquestionable integrity and ability of its officers.

We confidently commend to capitalists the above as an investment worthy their attention.

FIRST MORTGAGE

SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD BONDS

OF THE

CAYUGA LAKE RAILROAD,

ISSUED FOR $20,000 PER MILE.

STATE OF NEW-YORK

This road has now been in process of construction during the past year, and will be finished during the coming autumn; rails are laid and now being laid over one-third of the whole distance from Ithaca to Cayuga Bridge, where it crosses the New-York Central. At Ithaca, the Southern terminus of the road, it connects with the Ithaca and Athens Road, FINISHED, and daily delivering large quantities of COAL at that point. The Susquehanna Division of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad terminates also at Ithaca, where it is now accumulating an immense quantity of the COALS, awaiting the completion of this road for transportation. Thus it will be seen that this road will always have a large coal traffic from these two sources. Besides this, the local business, from a section of the finest agricultural district of this State, will be very large. We are offering a limited amount of

THE POOR CHILDREN.

Complete Success of the Excursion Movement.

How the Sick Children are to be Relieved.

Statistics of the Fund—The Saturday Excursion—Projected Excursions—The Sick Children—What the Children Say About the Movement.

The movement in behalf of the poor children of this City, as organized by the TRIBUNE, with the contributions of its readers, has now assumed visible shape. We have already given two excursions, and taken over 1,200 children into the country, half of whom were never out of the City limits before. These children have had a real holiday, have romped and played in the fresh, green woods, enjoyed pleasant rides on steamboat and railroad cars, have had plenty of excellent food, with the addition of rich lemonade and the rare treat of ice-cream and cake. None of them have been sick, no accidents have occurred, and there has been nothing to mar the festivities. A band of music has contributed to the pleasure of the children, and greatly aided in keeping them in order. Having been placed in possession of a large sum of money by our contributors, we have resolved to carry out the wishes of the donors to the TRIBUNE fund in the most thorough and painstaking manner. In all probability we shall be enabled by the aid of City missionaries, superintendents of industrial schools, schools and missions, and pastors of all denominations, to carry out of the City about 10,000 children, besides giving relief to 4,000 or 5,000 sick children. This work entails a great amount of labor, which we shall cheerfully perform, our entire staff of reporters having volunteered to attend to the details, in addition to their regular duties on the paper. We feel greatly encouraged by the success already achieved, and propose to continue in the way we have begun. It is very desirable that the contributors to the fund should take an active part in the movement, and as many as possible go with the excursions, as they will then see how we manage them. Suggestions are also solicited, as there are no doubt many that might be useful to us. Our readers will find herewith appended full details as to our arrangements.

The Fund.

The Excursion Fund, for the benefit of poor children, is assuming unlooked for proportions. We have today to acknowledge the receipt of thirty-six additional subscriptions, amounting to the total of $904 25, making the aggregate fund to date $4,319 07. This large sum will no doubt be further augmented, so that we shall be enabled to not only give an extended series of excursions, but organize the home relief on a scale commensurate with the necessities of those children unable to benefit by the excursions. The following subscriptions were received yesterday and on Saturday:

The Second Excursion.

The second picnic of the series inaugurated by the TIMES, through the generous subscriptions of its readers, took place Saturday morning. The Children's Aid Society marshaled for the excursion 800 children of five schools which have sprung into being under its care. As early as 7½ o'clock the little ones of the German School, with the night mission attached to it, of the Water-street School, of the Eleventh Ward School, of the Thirteenth Ward School, which is also a lodging-house for boys, and of the Avenue C School, were mustered at their respective institutions and marched down to the pier at the foot of Eighth-street and East River. Here they waited for some time, because the tug and the barge that were to convey them to Orienta Grove, on the placid waters of the Sound, had not yet put in an appearance. So they lounged patiently within the shadow of the great walls of the iron factories close to the pier. The boys girls scood quietly, showing their delight only in their faces, but the boys were irrepressible. They were boiling in their skins with rapture, and performed personal fandangoes of the most frenzied description, illustrative of their feelings. There was a great contrast between their appearance and the trim show made by the girls. Anxious mothers had toiled half the night to wash and iron the frocks, and had certainly spent a few quarters for ribbons and bows, so that their little girlhood took as well as other little girls. But the boys were for the most part ragged little urchins, bareheaded, bare-faced, with indescribable shirts and pantaloons. When the word was passed to the children to enter the barge there was no pushing nor crowding, though the impatient boys clambered like cats up the timbers, and would not wait the slower process by the gangway. In a very few minutes over 800 happy little ones were on board, nine-tenths ascending immediately to the upper tier. The band struck up a lively air, and the youngsters, in their glee, commenced capering about the deck in every direction, tumbling up against each other, falling down and picking themselves up again, and a bruise were a matter of course, and not to be thought of on so joyous an occasion.

The trip up the Sound was much enjoyed, and the children had abundance of lemonade and ice sandwiches. At the grove they rambled in the woods, used in swinging, and played to their hearts' content. There was plenty to eat, and no sickness occurred. At half o'clock the whistle sounded to call the little ones to the boat, and they cheerfully responded, so that in half an hour all were on board, and received a glass of lemonade and some ice cream, followed by cake. The barge returned to the City at 6 o'clock, and the children went to their several homes happy and contented.

The following were the receipts of Saturday's excursion:

We will have about $600 to pay by Wednesday, probably, on account of the Home Relief movement for the sick, the bills for supplies being due then. Our contributors will be kept duly advised as to our receipts and expenditures.

Continued Excursions.

The next excursion will take place Friday next, when some 1,200 children from the west side of the City, between Fifty-fourth-street and the Battery, will start on one of Mr. Crowell's barges from the foot of Christopher-street, North River. The picnic party will proceed down the river and harbor to Raritan Bay, New-Jersey, landing at Eagleswood Grove. On the following day, Saturday, our fourth excursion for poor children will take place, when fully 800 children belonging to the Wilson Mission and the "Home Schools" will participate. Bands will be provided on both occasions; and as we intend to entertain the children in the most thorough manner on all future occasions, it has been thought advisable to organize a small corps of waiters, in order that those who are in charge of the children may pay their undivided attention to that duty. So far we have been most successful in preventing accidents; but under the new system the chances of mishap will be rendered yet more improbable. All the arrangements, from the moment the excursion starts from the wharf until its safe return to the City will be under the personal supervision of three or four representatives of the TIMES. We have been thus explicit in order that our plans may be fully understood.

The Relief Fund for Sick Children.

In order that a portion of the Excursion Fund, so liberally subscribed by the public, might be promptly applied to alleviate the wants of sick children, a considerable portion of New-York was visited yesterday by the attaches of the TIMES, especially detailed to organize this system of relief. We are pleased to state that today the matter is fully in hand, and with fair prospects of success.

Among the numerous districts visited yesterday a representative of the paper called on Mr. George Calder, Superintendent of the Rivington-street Lodging-house. This institution is situated between the Eleventh and Thirteenth Wards, in the midst of a very poor neighborhood. It was from this portion of the City that most of the children came on the excursion of Saturday last. Almost immediately several cases of illness and sufferings among children who have not yet been reached were reported, to which speedy relief was given.

The plan arranged for giving aid to the sick children may be briefly stated as follows, and the same method as is now being carried in this neighborhood will be carried out in other districts, subject, of course, to such modifications as may suggest themselves. Teachers will report to Mr. George Calder, at No. 227 Rivington-street, any cases of sickness among the children. Mr. Calder will be supplied with such stores as may be requisite, and will give orders on apothecaries, grocers, butchers and ice-men. He will have several cases of fans for distribution for the use of sick children. Should the services of a physician be thought necessary, Mr. Calder will notify Dr. Ira M. Lang, of No. 225 Henry-street, and Dr. Henry E. Crampton, of No. 324 East Fourth-street, who will immediately visit the sick children. These gentlemen being in sympathy with the relief movement, have tendered their services at a nominal charge. Mr. Calder will be in attendance from 2 to 10 A. M., and from 6 to 8 P. M., every day until further notice, to answer calls in behalf of children. We are, therefore, satisfied that for the present the sufferings of the little ones in a portion of the First Ward, and in the Fifth, Eleventh, Thirteenth and Fourteenth Wards will receive immediate attention. To-morrow we hope to report progress of a similar character in other quarters. Teachers of Missions and philanthropic persons interested in the cause, assisted by the TIMES reporters, will do their utmost to discover and give aid to the poor little sufferers. Money will not be given save in exceptional cases, as it is found to be better and safer to distribute medicines, palatable food, ice, or whatever may be necessary. As assistance of this character, if given at all, must be given promptly, especially during the present sickly season to organize this special relief, has considerably increased the sphere of our labors. We must thank Mr. Calder, who, in addition to his present labors, has given us great help in perfecting our system of relieving sick children. We shall endeavor to publish daily accounts of the disbursements of that portion of the funds so generously contributed by our readers, which will be devoted to the sick.

Several cases of the saddest character, where infants and children were found sinking from want of proper food and medicines, were relieved yesterday. As these were considered cases of peculiar emergency, and it being the Sabbath, money was given. The largest sum was given to a poor woman with five children—one dollar—and smaller sums to others. Some of the scenes witnessed were painful to a degree. Poor little sufferers with wan faces were found, wanting nourishing food and cooling drinks, who for the last week had had nothing but meat, and very little of that. We refrain from giving many details of this work today, as it is only fairly begun. Hereafter full accounts of our labors in this direction will be given.

In pursuance of the plan adopted by the TIMES, a reporter has on several occasions, in company with the Five Points missionary, visited a number of the sick poor of that locality. It not being deemed judicious to place money in the hands of the people visited, their immediate wants have been attended to, and, so far as possible, the bills incurred were paid on the spot, and orders given for ice, milk for "beef-tea" and mutton-broth, and other small comforts as the sick require. Doctors' bills and medicines have so far reached only a small amount, the doctors preferring to send in their bills when the necessity for their visits no longer exists. A few of the most interesting cases are presented to our readers whose sympathies are already so fully enlisted in behalf of the suffering poor.

At No. 73 Baxter-street an aged Italian woman lay ill on a bed, the apartment were close and hot, and so situated as to render ventilation almost impossible; she was supplied with brandy as ordered by the physician, and ice was ordered to be left at her room every day, the man generously giving the pounds free of charge for immediate use, before he was asked to supply it daily. The fact is recorded simply to show that the spirit of generosity pervades all classes.

At No. 41 Mulberry-street we found a little boy just recovering from a severe attack of bronchitis. The mother not being at home, the child was directed to send her to the House of Industry as soon as she returned, so that she might procure proper food for him. The room was an attic one, with sloping roof and old-fashioned gable window, through which the stove-pipe passed, and here the hard-working woman lived, doing both washing and ironing, in a space scarcely large enough for an ordinary sized bed. The heat from the steaming clothes and stove make the room so hot that she is obliged to spread her bedding on the floor of the narrow corridor for herself and little boy. Passing down the steep, narrow step-way, an unusual object in the shape of a children's clothes-rack met the eye, suggesting to the reporter the removal of an old piano of nothing disguised the characteristic form of a little child. Who had lain sick since June 5 without medical assistance. A physician was sent for and an order given the mother for such nourishing food as the child might need. In this house, packed with suffering humanity, 207 persons, 112 of whom are children, drag out a wretched existence. No. 42 Mulberry-street was next visited. There, in a close apartment, was found the mother of a distressing character. The father is a carpenter, and owing to the hard times is out of work. The children have been earning a little all Winter, but three weeks ago the eldest boy fell sick of fever and slept and had to stop work. Six weeks ago the second boy fell sick with dropsy, and the eldest girl had to leave her work to take care of the house-work at home. A physician of her own choice is now in attendance on the sucker, and the charges paid from the fund generously contributed by our readers. When asked why she had allowed herself to remain without some medical advice for three weeks, she replied that the doctors she had had gave her no encouragement, and she felt too poor to afford to call in the doctor she would like. Her sympathy at last became so alarming that she put her "best dress in pawn" and went for "the doctor." Her dress was redeemed and she was tendered hearty hesitation in asking the stakeman for anything the doctor might think advisable for her. This family has been visited several times, and the gratitude manifested by them is quite touching; she seems time the curious mother of three little boys. Though poor, they are very neat-looking lads, and both of them say they would "like to go to the country in some good place." This same spirit is manifested by many of the parents and children, and possibly only needs to be known to insure an adequate response to the appeal for charity has already secured.

Sentiments of the Children.

The effect of the TIMES' excursions on the inhabitants of the Tenderloin Ward, was yesterday expressed by them in terms of grateful enthusiasm. The parents of those little ones who had taken part in the excursion of Saturday, seemed as if they could not say enough in its praise, and remarked that their children could hardly sleep for thinking of the happy day they had enjoyed. One of the children, when asked what she remembered of the picnic, "Oh," said she, "the candy, thir." "Anything else?" "Yeth, the flowers and the thumps. It wath the jolly." Several of the children were found in the Tompkins-street Mission Sunday-school, where they expressed themselves well pleased with the previous day's trip. Some had never been on the water before in their lives, and many never had the opportunity to run around unrestricted upon the grass. They wished to know when the next picnic would take place, as they were very anxious to go again.

The children belonging to the Water-street Industrial School expressed themselves much to the same effect. The mothers were thankful that some one had had the kind thought to look after their little ones when it was beyond their power to do it themselves. One mother, who was detained at home by the care of an infant, said she tell a little uneasy about her two little girls while they were absent from her sight, but the tales they had to tell about what was done while they had been away repaid her somewhat for her uneasiness. In answer to questions, the children said they "liked the water and the cake, and the ice-cream and the soups, and the flowers, and everything, and they wahted to go again." The last part of the answer was given with an earnestness which carried conviction with it. Other children spoken with replied in the same enthusiastic strain, all evidently having had a day's enjoyment which they would not readily forget. In the majority of instances it was their first picnic.

The German Industrial School, established on Second-street, between Avenues C and D, which sent 250 young ones to Saturday's fête, was closed yesterday. But it was not difficult to come in contact with the recipients of the treat, for they all live in the immediate locality. On the sidewalk, rushing across the street, playing in dangerous proximity to the not overclean gutter, crowding on the door-steps, in fact almost everywhere in the vicinity of the school, were children whom the reporter recognized and who recognized him. They immediately jumped to the conclusion that they were going to be taken again, and looked expectantly for tickets. When asked how they liked the picnic they were vociferous in their exclamations of pleasure. Their parents looked on smilingly, especially the men. The fair frauen were more sober about the matter. Said the reporter to one of the children, "What makes your mother look so grave about the picnic?" "Why," she replied, "Amalie had on a new dress, and it was torn, besides being stained with ice-cream. 'Twas a boy that done it. 'Twasn't her fault, but mine moder was very angry." Hereupon a fat Teuton, who was gravely smoking his pipe, puffed out a volume of smoke, and commenced a long discourse on the affair, in German, whereof the writer understood not one word. It was curious that so few of the parents in that neighborhood could speak English, for all the children gabbled it with the utmost facility.

In the locality of Five Points it was difficult to walk the length of a block without meeting many faces familiar to those who have attended the picnics of the past week. The little waifs and wanderers looked up gladly and with countenances beaming with pleasure as they recognized those under whose guidance they passed a day so eventful in their young lives. As they ran about barefooted over the hot pavements, or through streets whose confines seem with pestilence and are pregnant with disease and death, the remembrance of green fields, cool paths, overhanging trees and the heavy flash of ocean waves upon a pebbly beach continually returned to them. One of these little wanderers said, "Mister, I wondered some we had last Thursday. Such lots of sandwiches, pickles and ice-cream! Will we ever go to Rockaway again?" The writer replied that it was very likely, and desired to know whether the boy's parents approved of his tramping "Wall" and "Broadway" fagged, "you know at first they didn't like to have me go away so far from home for fear I'd never come back again, but I told 'em I'd go anyhow, if they did lick me when I got back. You see," he added confidentially, "the old woman aint very lively, and when she hits the bottle of the Widow's and when I've got about enough I run out and don't come back till she forgets all about it. Dad aint 'round much, and I stay out in the street when he's biln.'"

"And what did they say when you returned from Rockaway Thursday evening?" "Oh, they looked pleased, little Arab, with intense delight depicted in every feature. I just filled my pockets with cake and sandwiches and put a lot of berries 'twixt the linin' of my cap and the top, so" when I got back I gave Mary and the old woman a treat. She said she guessed the people meant to be good to the poor, and she's a walin also let me go out in the street and play."

"Then you think she would let you go on another excursion by and by, if we make up one, do you?"

"Yes just bet she would!" exclaimed the youngster, hitching up his trousers and performing the first movement of the utmost confidence in his production.

A little further on, a slightly built Italian girl, with bronzed cheeks, laughing eyes, neatly braided hair, a torn dress and bare feet, same running up and recognized the writer's hand.

"Well, little girl, did you have a pleasant time at the picnic? Tell me now, what did you do there?"

The dusky little maiden looked up coyly, and broke out with "Oh! I just played all day long, swinging and running and pickin' blackberries and cherries. (Her little visit coincided with the cherries were cherries,) and we picked flowers and made bouquets and oh! had a nice dinner."

"Will your mother let you go again?"

The longing eyes filled with tears, and from a throat finally with sudden emotion came the words, "Mamma died a few weeks ago, and I haven't anybody but papa and baby. An old lady takes care of baby, and I live with her. Papa will let me go."

Several other children told their stories, all recollecting their excursion with pleasure and desiring to go again. Such parents of children as were conversed with expressed satisfaction that their little ones were enabled by the kindness of the charitable to breathe the fresh air of the country for a day, and in many cases they called down blessings upon the heads of those who so nobly responed to the appeal of the TIMES, and furnished the means by which these excursions are carried out.

The Five Points Mission.

To the Editor of the New-York Tribune:

Will you please allow me, through your columns, to thank most sincerely the kind contributors to the fund, for the day of unalloyed pleasure which our little ones, and others from the vicinity, enjoyed yesterday on the occasion of the picnic given under the auspices of THE TRIBUNE? It was, indeed, a red-letter day in our calendar. Gratefully,

WM. F. BARNARD, Superintendent.

FIVE POINTS HOUSE OF INDUSTRY, Friday, July 11, 1873.

STILL IN SUSPENSE.

The Stokes Jury Unable to Find a Verdict.

Scenes Around the Court-House Yesterday—No Chance of an Agreement—The Jury Again Locked Up All Night.

Early yesterday morning, while the religious portion of the community were about preparing for church service, an immense concourse of people, largely composed of ladies, had assembled on the steps of the new Court-house on Chambers-street and the adjoining side-walks, anxiously awaiting the announcement of the verdict of the jury in the Stokes case. The trouble and interested activity of this large mass of people on the Sabbath morning were not calculated to create a really moral impression. Anxious as to their arrival in the time, many of them came rushing toward the Court, heedless of the intense heat, and with a general appearance of excitement which showed they had not so far noticed the day so to pay it the small homage of ordinary care in their dress.

About 10 o'clock the ladies were admitted to the Court-room, with the apparently small number of individuals, but the vast majority of applicants were denied admission. Inside many speculations were rife as to the decision of the jury. With the statement of their position on the previous evening, and their apparently fixed opinions, there were few who supposed that during the night any agreement had been arrived at, and consequently were not disappointed when the result was subsequently announced. The question of holding Court on the Sabbath was also canvassed, very many believing that judicial action on that day would be illegal; but by a special statute of the Legislature the Court is empowered to extend the recess from Saturday to Sunday, and record the proceedings of the Sabbath as of the previous day. Precisely at 12 o'clock Judge Ingraham took his seat on the bench, and immediately afterward Stokes, accompanied by his brother and a few personal friends (his father, mother and sister were absent), entered the Court, and occupied his accustomed seat beside his counsel. He was very pale and careworn, and as he dropped on the chair involuntarily a sigh escaped him. The jury was then summoned, and, amid breathless silence, took their seats. It was observed that the prisoner never looked toward them, even while their names were being called, until the Judge addressing the foreman, said, "I understand, gentlemen, you have not agreed?" With a quick start he glanced at the jury, and something like a smile played across his face.

The FOREMAN said—There is no probability that we can agree; not the least chance.

Judge INGRAHAM—I hardly feel satisfactory to discharge you yet. This case has lasted nearly three weeks, and it would not be proper to let you go without giving this case further consideration.

FOREMAN—We are just exactly as we stood last night.

Judge INGRAHAM—I don't want to know how you stood. You must again retire, and if you agree you can communicate with me through the officers.

The jury then retired, and Stokes, who received the congratulations of his friends, was removed.

Throughout the entire day the Court-house was agitated with the rumor relating to expectation of an agreement among the jurors. Toward evening their anxiety appeared to abate, as it became evident that there was no possibility of an agreement being arrived at, and as it would take fully three hours to communicate with Judge Ingraham at his residence in Harlem, and give him time to attend in Court. About 5 o'clock the crowd had thinned down to a few scattered groups. The jury was continued together through the night, and if an agreement is not come to before time morning at the sitting of the Court, they will probably be discharged.

A Ring of Honor for the Police.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

After the July riot of 1863 it was commonly understood and admitted that this City was saved from sack by the splendid bravery and discipline of the Police. After the July riot of 1871 it was admitted that they had again conspicuously distinguished themselves by the exhibition of the same qualities. It is of the first importance that everything should be done to keep this body of men non-partisan, efficient, thoroughly disciplined, faithful—the right arm of the civil authority, the impartial guardian of the public peace and personal safety. It is impracticable to expect that under our present civil service system the New-York Police force can be thoroughly impartisan or blameless; but when we consider the demoralizing influences to which it has been subjected it is surprising how efficient it is, and how trustworthy in every emergency. To aid in strengthening its esprit de corps a suggestion was made by me last Summer that the citizens of New-York, without distinction of creed, party, or nationality, should procure a very handsome flag to be made, and present it, as a Flag of Honor, to the Police, with the condition that it should only be carried at the funerals of men who died in the line of duty, and at the annual parades of the Police Department. The responses to this appeal have been liberal, $[illegible] having been subscribed and paid over to Henry A. Oakley, Esq., President of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, who kindly consented to act as treasurer. Of this sum, the New-York Board of Underwriters contributed $250, the Mutual Life Insurance Company $100, the Equitable Life Insurance Company $75, the United States Life Insurance Company $50, and the New-York Trimming Association $50. The flag, which is said to be the finest piece of embroidery of the kind made in this country, is now on exhibition at the Underwriters' Hall, No. 128 Broadway. The feeling among the subscribers to this fund is that this fine shall be given to the Police not because a portion of the rioters of 1863 were rebels, nor because a portion of those of 1871 were Catholics or Orangemen, but because during both of these conflicts the cause of the public peace, and on many another occasion, our policemen did their duty as brave, true men, even to the sacrifice of their lives.

If, with this explanation, the object in view meets with your approval, you will confer a favor by bringing the subject to the notice of your readers.

The presentation committee will probably consist of the Presidents of the New-York and National Boards of Fire Underwriters, the Stock Exchange, the Clearing-house, the Produce Exchange, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Mayor, chosen from the First Division of Police, the members of which have already accepted the duty. After consultation with Superintendent Kelso, it is proposed to have the presentation ceremony occur on the day of the next general parade of the Police Department. There is still lacking about $400 to pay for the flag, and for photographs of the same to be placed in the several precinct station-houses, and the Committee would be glad to have you announce this fact, receive such sums as may be offered, and hand them to Mr. Oakley, who will be found at No. 68 Wall-street, in the office of the Howard Fire Insurance Company, of which he is Vice-President.

Yours respectfully,

H. S. OLCOTT,
Secretary of the Committee.

Supposed Broken Throughout.

Arthur Meagher, of No. 322 East Thirtieth-street, was found overcome by the heat at the High Bridge yesterday.

Bridget Mulligan, aged sixty-three, of No. 109 Cedar-street, was found at the corner of Murray and West streets, exhausted by the heat.

John Cody, thirty-six years of age, of No. 66 Washington-street, was found prostrated by the heat at the corner of West and Cortlandt streets.

John Hill, of No. 153 East Twenty-eighth-street, was overcome by heat yesterday, and taken to his home.

Railroad Accidents in New-Jersey.

Wm. White, colored, residing in Newark, was instantly killed, at an early hour yesterday morning, while attempting to jump upon an eastern-bound freight-train at the Market-street Depot.

At 2:40 o'clock yesterday morning, an accident occurred on the Morris and Essex Railroad at Newark, caused by the breaking of a freight-train, consisting of about twenty-five cars, most of them empty. One of the couplings broke while the train was on the heavy grade between Orange and Newark. The engineer, unaware of the accident, stopped at the Broad-street Depot, when the latter half of the train, moving rapidly down the steep grade, ran into the portion which had stopped, throwing a number of the cars from the track and completely wrecking two of them. No person was injured.

Daniel Albert, a cigar-maker, living in Jersey City, was fatally injured, yesterday morning, by falling from the high railway bridge over the Raritan River at New-Brunswick. Albert left Jersey City on the midnight train, arrived in New-Brunswick at 1:30. The platform of the depot runs for some distance along the bridge, and a railing only a few feet high is placed below. It is believed that Albert, on reaching the injured case must have climbed, or fallen in some way. He was picked up in an insensible condition.

ENGLAND'S WEALTH.

The Surplus Revenue Income of the Kingdom—The Ebb-Tide of Prosperity Discussed.

From the London Times, July 7.

The return of the revenue for the quarter which ended yesterday confirms the fact that we read in our advertising columns in the Stock Exchange lists, and by all who go into the city in buy and sell. The revenue of business is now at high tide. We are passing through a phase of abundant prosperity. Orders have been flowing in upon our manufacturers faster than they can be executed. The Board of Trade returns show that the amount of commodities imported and exported continues to increase beyond all precedent. The Clearing-house total of the half-year is larger than it has ever been before. The traffic receipts of railways grow week after week. Custom results necessarily follow. Railway stocks have for some time been steadily improving in value. The shares in other departments have shown a similar movement; and, as a matter of course, these flattering results, coincident with a large development of trade, have brought into the market, per Telegraph daily, hundreds of thousands of new shareholders. The rapidity with which the surplus revenue is increasing is somewhat startling. We hear little of complaints of the pressure of taxation, or of the pace in becoming somewhat too rapid. We hear little or none. The old cry is raised. Every one knows that there must be a reaction, that the great promoters of Scott American enterprise must in many cases prove like others of the same kind that have gone before, that the date of a crisis may be calculated like the date of an eclipse; but we all believe that we shall save ourselves in time, let who will be left behind. Meanwhile money is being won, and why should we not all enter for the stakes? As we hear what our neighbors have done, and the tales of their successes are too often apocryphal—the excitement of example becomes irresistible, and our nation is blown to the winds. Years altogether from irregular and accidental items of increase, the revenue of the past quarter is more than a million in excess of the revenue of the same period last year. There has been a rate under every head of income but two; and those two are exceptional. The one is not in itself absolutely stationary, and the other—the Miscellaneous Receipts—indicates a falling off which can be at once accounted for. * * * There never was a Budget less ambitious than that for the present financial year, and it is satisfactory to think that it may be rewarded with a success due to modest merit. We do not lose sight of the risks which have to be run between now and next April. The harvest will certainly be late, and, though its prospects are at present fair, there is a possibility that it will prove deficient. We cannot tell on the 1st of July in a backward year what may be in prospect. We can say one predict the issue of the struggle between employers and employed which has stopped the building trade of London in all its branches. Audacious friends may, on abstract principles, exhort one or the other side to persevere while innocent of all knowledge necessary to form an opinion on the points in dispute. But, unless workmen and employers consent to refer their quarrel to some tribunal in which both can have confidence, there can be no satisfactory solution of the difficulty, and, indeed, no solution whatever until a protracted struggle ends in exhausting the resources of one party. But if the genial influences only prevail, and the harvest is favorable, Mr. Lowe may anticipate an overflowing Exchequer. The receipts for the quarter which has just ended, after deducting the property tax, and making allowance for the item of miscellaneous receipts, show a gain exceeding £1,100,000. This much has been realized, and may serve as a reserve fund to balance any unexpected falling off in the remaining quarters; but if, instead of a falling off, the gain be maintained, the revenue of the twelve-month will exhibit a magnificent surplus. It would be too curious to inquire how much of the increase of revenue shown in the quarter just ended depended upon hopes only for this year, but for the years to follow. We have already hinted an apprehension that the revived activity of trade is stimulating speculation to an extent which must be succeeded by a reaction; and it requires no second sight to predict a season when the wheel of fortune will turn, and the manufacture of companies will again for a time be stopped.

The Elsatians and Lorraine Demonstration.

The demonstration, which has been in preparation by the Elsatians and Lorraines resident in this City, and which is intended to manifest their loyalty to the French Republic, will come off today. The programme is as follows: At 8 o'clock this morning a meeting will be held at Irving Hall; at 9, a procession will be formed, which, starting from the hall, will march through Broadway down to the French General Consulate, where the members will enroll themselves French citizens, and be packed. Both of these ceremonies formalities the line will be formed again, and the procession will pass up Broadway to the Armory of the Garde Lafayette, at the Casino, in Houston-street, where it will disperse. It is estimated that there are between 3,000 and 4,000 natives of the annexed provinces in this City, their number having been largely increased of late by immigration.
